Bernard Reynolds, M.A.; The Minor Festivals of the Anglican Calendar, by the Rev. W. J. Sparrow Simpson, M.A. Readers of those portions of the Book of Common Prayer not recited in public worship often encounter names in the Calendar which, to say the least, require further explanation. They discover names which they have heard before, and also names of which they know literally nothing. Who are these? Why are these names here? In this volume an answer to these questions is attempted.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons, Edinburgh and London.—'From Capetown to Ladysmith and Egypt in 1898,' by G. W. Stevens, edited by V. Blackburn. In her prefatory note to this fourth volume of Messrs. Blackwood's handsome edition of her regretted husband's works, Mrs. Stevens tells us that, when the effects of that prince of war correspondents arrived home from Ladysmith, she found among them six letters intended for the Daily Mail, but never published; and readers will thank her for including them in this new and enlarged edition of the famous letters afterwards reprinted with the title 'From Capetown to Ladysmith,' and now arranged according to the supposed plan of their writer, by Mr. Vernon Blackburn, who has added a final chapter, including extracts from letters written after Stevens's death by those who knew him, and who bear testimony to his sterling qualities. Among these is Lord Kitchener, who says of him:

'He was with me in the Soudan, and I knew him well. He was such a clever and able man. He did his work as correspondent so brilliantly, and he never gave the slightest trouble—I wish all correspondents were like him. I suppose they will try and follow in his footsteps. I am sure I hope they will.' Of Egypt in 1898 what more can be said here than has been said already elsewhere? Both the works comprised in this volume show the marvellous faculty possessed by Stevens of describing places, persons, and events in the fewest and most telling words. While reading his works so worthily produced in these handy and beautifully printed volumes, it is impossible to repress a feeling of regret that a life so full of promise should have been so prematurely cut off. Let us trust Lord Kitchener's hope that other war correspondents will try to follow in his steps may be fulfilled. He has certainly left a noble example to all.

From Mr. William Bryce (Edinburgh).—'Student's Manual of Medical Jurisprudence and Public Health,' by G. H. Giffen, L.R.C.P. and S.E. In a handy volume of three hundred and odd pages Mr. H. Giffen has provided medical students with a succinct yet sufficient guide to the medical and surgical knowledge needed in criminal cases. It is divided into three parts. The first of these, entitled 'Forensic Medicine,' gives clear instructions on such subjects as criminal procedure and evidence, the examination of persons found dead, signs of death, post-mortem examinations, assaults and homicide, irresponsibility for crime, and on the various kinds of death. The second part, headed 'Toxicology,' treats of the various kinds of poisons, the ways in which they may be administered, and the methods of detecting them, and also of treating cases of poisoning. The third part deals with 'Public Health,' including water, sewage, air, vital statistics, and dwellings, in which are comprised the cognate subjects hospitals, communicable diseases, and disposal of the dead. The manual is provided with an excellent index. The author believes that this useful little book contains sufficient information for either a college or university examination. We think he is justified in this belief.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Two Lectures introductory to the Study of Poetry,' by the Rev. H. C. Beeching, M.A. All who are fond of verse and would know something of the inner nature of the faculty that affords them such pleasure may be recommended to read this concisely written, thoughtful little work, which will well repay the time spent in perusal. The first lecture is devoted to a consideration of 'Passion and Imagination in Poetry,' while the second treats of 'Expression.'

From the Church Newspaper Company.—'Christian Egypt: Past, Present, and Future,' by the Rev. Montague Fowler, M.A. This volume has been written with the object of placing within easy reach of all classes of English-speaking people a simple historical retrospect of the Christian Church in Egypt. A large number of people will no doubt be glad to have a brief but fairly comprehensive account of the work that is being done for Christ in the midst of the millions of Mohammedans, who, as our author tells us, form nine-tenths of the population of the Nile valley north of the Soudan. Mr. Fowler's work is divided into three parts, of which the first contains a history of the Coptic Church and the Church of Abyssinia; the second is devoted to a consideration of the Christian churches and missions in Egypt; and the third discusses the future possibilities of Christianity in Egypt. The author believes that the native Christian Church, despite its present small numbers, will ultimately be the means of convincing the Mohammedan population of the glorious truths of Christianity. His book—the outcome apparently of much sympathetic zeal—is supplied with an excellent index.

From Messrs. Deighton, Bell & Co. (Cambridge).—'The Risen Master,' a Sequel to 'Pastor Pastorum,' by Rev. Henry Latham, M.A. The Master of Trinity Hall, in his 'Pastor Pastorum,' to which the book before us is a sequel, traced the steps by which Our Lord fitted his Apostles for the work to which He had called them. The special subject of the 'Pastor Pastorum' was the work of Our Lord as a teacher and moulder of men. 'I have now,' says the author, 'to pass beyond that, and speak of His accomplishment of what I count the supreme manifestation of God to mankind. The Incarnation, the Resurrection, and the Descent of the Spirit, taken all in one, constitute, as I hold, one transcendent fact of divine interposition, of the same order as the Creation, the awakening of Light, and the sending of Life upon the earth. In all these matters God spoke to the world in the language of facts, and it is with the outward facts of the Resurrection that my business chiefly lies. I shall present them in the way in which, as it seems to me, they came to pass, describing what I suppose I should have seen if I had been by. . . . If I can help to show that any appearance of the risen Lord is attested in the same way as are certain facts commonly accepted as history, then I shall have accomplished as much as I can hope.' The above quotation from the preface suffices to show the author's aim in writing this important work. The nature and magnitude of the events discussed in its pages preclude any attempt at an examination of them here. Two plates, representing the exterior and interior of the Holy Sepulchre, contribute greatly to the elucidation of the writer's views on the resurrection, and we should think this most interesting treatise on so vital an article of the creed must be a welcome addition to the Bible student's library.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Story of Rome,' by Norwood Young, illustrated by Nelly Erichsen. This is in all respects a delightful little book. It was a truly formidable undertaking to give a readable history of the Eternal City in so small compass as is afforded by this dainty volume, but Mr. Norwood Young has succeeded in composing an attractive recital of the most striking events in the history of the city from its foundation until the present day. He only calls it 'an abridgment of the work of many authors and many volumes;' but he has made admirable use of the material at his disposal. An appendix contains practical suggestions for hurried visitors, a list of books, and a brief statement of the more interesting objects to be found in some of the most important churches. There are some excellent plans to facilitate the explorations of tourists, and the illustrations by Miss Nelly Erichsen, which are well chosen and beautifully executed, add greatly to the charm as well as to the value of the attractive little work.

From the Free Age Press, Christchurch, Hants. 'Resurrection: a Novel,' by Leo Tolstoy. Translated by Mrs. Aylmer Maude. It is a pity, we think, that many of the disgusting and filthy descriptions in this powerful picture of wretched life in Russia were not omitted from this 'popular' English edition published at 6d. We can understand such a work serving a good purpose in Russia, since it is a terrible picture of the horrors of the Siberian exile system, but why should these and other abominations be served up unpurged in English, and for the public which buys sixpenny novels? It is sad that English-speaking girls and youths should be exposed to such contamination. Tolstoy may be honest enough, but we cannot see how anything but harm can come of trying to reform the world by quite needlessly plunging innocent souls into cesspools.

From Mr. Henry Frowde.—‘At the Gates of Song: Sonnets,’ by Lloyd Mifflin. This volume has already appeared in America, and it has now been revised for publication in this country. Mr. Mifflin possesses many characteristics that make for success. He has deep feeling and a command of poetic expression. Such lines as those commencing

‘The sun is sinking softly down the sky,
And all the air is growing hushed and still,
A tinge of rose has touched the purple hill
Where slow the silver river murmurs by.’

at once entitle him to the attention of the reader, who will find on closer acquaintance with the American poet that there is a charm in his work to which he will readily fall captive. A very artistic portrait of the author is given as a frontispiece.

From Messrs. Gale and Polden.—‘Practical Military Sketching,’ by C. F. Vander Byl, 16th Lancers, fully illustrated. The aim of this most useful little work is to reduce the system of military sketching to as simple a form as possible. In fact, the least amount of drawing should be done compatible with a true delineation of the ground. Hill features are represented by contours instead of by the old system of hachuring, which required that the sketcher should possess special ability in the way of draftsmanship if the result was to be satisfactory. In military sketching the chief points to be aimed at are accuracy, neatness, and rapidity. We hope this work will have a large sale throughout our army, and be used in all military schools and cadet classes.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—‘Kingdom of Song: a Collection of Songs for Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, and all Religious Services,’ edited by T. M. Bowditch. The contents of this volume are admirably adapted for the purpose intended, and should obtain as wide a circulation in this country as in the United States, whence they originally proceed. Both music and words are given, and the attractive simplicity of the one and the fervour of the other should materially contribute towards rendering the volume a great success.

From the same.—‘Men of Men: Men of men were they and their fathers were men of men before them,’ by C. Fox Smith, author of ‘The Foremost Trail’ and ‘Songs of Greater Britain.’ The young lady the author of these stirring war songs has been congratulated on them by the Duke of Argyll to whom they are dedicated, by General Buller, and by many of our influential newspapers. In her preface she tells us that the verses relating to the glorious episodes of the Peninsular War sprang from her desire to record in poetry deeds of her countrymen which have too long been unsung, and there is such power and fire in her poems on ‘Talavera,’ ‘Fuentes d’Onor,’ ‘Albuera,’ &c., as ought to make them popular especially among soldiers. Many of the songs describe strikingly and well episodes in the South African War, as, for instance, ‘Jack Ashore, Ladysmith, October 30, 1899,’ ‘Mafeking,’ ‘The Search-light, Kimberley,’ &c. Here is a specimen of Miss Fox Smith's verse from the prologue to her ‘Peninsular Ballads’:

‘This is the lot of the English; in many a page it is written,—
To weep for a loved one that sleeps in a grave that is far o’er the wave;
Fighting far over the seas the perilous battles of Britain,
Winning her way thro’ the years with the blood of her dear and her brave.’

We have met with no song-writer of late whose verse is more imbued with true patriotism than Miss Fox Smith.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—‘Abyssinia: Through the Lion-Land to the Court of the Lion of Judah,’ by Herbert Vivian, M.A., with map and about 80 illustrations. Mr. Vivian tells us in his preface that he does not claim to have written an exhaustive monograph of Abyssinia. ‘I offer,’ he says, ‘mere impressions. I shall be satisfied if I succeed in conveying these impressions to the public.’ For ourselves we can only say that we have read this brightly written book with great interest, an interest which is stimulated by the wealth of illustrations. Mr. Vivian had no great adventures, and made his way to the Court of the Emperor Menelik II. and back again with such facility that after reading this book all one's ideas as to the inaccessibility of Abyssinia vanish. We do not mean that the month's journey between Zaila, on the Gulf of Aden, and Addis-Ababa is a mere ‘walk-over;’ the plagues of flies, the heat by day and cold by night, the miles of marching through rain and mud, the worries and discomforts of caravan life—all so well described by Mr. Vivian—will not appeal to the ordinary globe-trotter. Of the country through which he passed and its inhabitants, including lions, deadly snakes, bands of murderers, and other noxious animals, Mr. Vivian gives us excellent verbal snapshots. The flies in Abyssinia must be awful, and if flies are evidence of dirt the Abyssinians must be the filthiest people on earth. At first our author could not understand how it was that whenever he passed a party of natives he found himself assailed by a swarm of flies, then he discovered that ‘every Abyssinian habitually went about with large black clusters of flies on his or her back and clothes.’ Mr. Vivian tells us that England appears to be the nation at present most esteemed, or perhaps one should say least disliked by the Negus, and this is owing almost entirely to the tact of Captain Harrington, our admirable representative at the Emperor's court. The failure of the Italians in their Abyssinian campaign seems to have been due to rashness and bad generalship on their part, and the fact that the Abyssinians are as well mounted and as mobile as the Boers. The illustrations appear to have been made from photographs taken by Captain Harrington and Captain Powell-Cotton. The journey was undertaken for Mr. Pearson's paper, the Daily Express, and we congratulate him on the success of the enterprise, the result being the best book of travel which has appeared for a long time.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—‘Concerning Children,’ by Charlotte Perkins (Stetson) Gilman. Mrs. Gilman holds the scales very evenly between parents and their offspring in this volume. If aged demands certain concessions from youth, so there are duties which the elderly should discharge to the young; all the payment is not on the one side. The authoress enters upon some interesting questions in connection with child life. Among these may be mentioned the transmission of acquired traits, the effect of obedience, the question of discipline, the position of children as members of society, their home surroundings, the presumption of age, the respect due to youth, and the natural and unnatural types of mothers. In her criticisms Mrs. Gilman is very outspoken, and sometimes not a little startling. She tells us, for instance, that obedience as a factor in the education of children is by no means an unmixed blessing. ‘Docility, subservience, a quick surrender of purpose, a wavering, untrained, easily shaken judgment—these are the qualities developed by much obedience,’ and are we anxious for their development among our citizens? Then, again, she strikes out boldly in reference to the deference demanded by old age. ‘The ineffable presumption of aged persons is an affliction too long endured. Much is told us of the becoming modesty of youth. Is no modesty becoming a period of life when experience has given some measure to merit? Why should youth be modest? Youth believes it can do all things, and has had no proof to the contrary. But age—age which has tried many times and been met by failure; age which has learnt its limitation by repeated blows and become content with hard-worn compromise—why should age be so proud?’ Such originality of opinion and candid expression render the book extremely lively reading. We should like to have referred to other portions of the work, but in the limited space at our disposal it is only possible to mention that Mrs. Gilman has much that is interesting to argue in regard to the transmission of acquired traits. The guinea-pig, she points out, that has had one of its legs amputated, does not transmit this loss to its offspring, and the dwindled feet of the Chinese ladies are not passed down from generation to generation, though Chinese habits are. ‘The children of a soldier are supposed to inherit something of his courage and his habit of obedience, not his wooden leg.’ An acquired trait therefore can be transmitted, but not an injury. The difficulty, it seems to us, is to prove that the trait has actually been acquired and not transmitted, wholly or in part, through the blood.

From the same.—‘Maya: a Story of Yucatan,’ by Wm. Dudley Foulke. Illustrated. This is a tale of graceful fancy that gains in effect from being enacted amid the surroundings of superstitious uncivilised life. The period is at the beginning of the sixteenth century, when Yucatan, that rugged peninsula stretching northward into the Gulf of Mexico, was an unexplored territory. Some sailors, the survivors from a shipwreck, land on the coast, and are promptly made captives by the natives. Five are barbarously put to death at the evening religious festival, but the remainder manage to escape into the woods. The story is chiefly concerned with the adventures of one of their number. In the course of his wanderings, when reduced to the last stage of despair, he meets a Maya princess, who happily falls in love with him; and owing to this circumstance his life is preserved. But both he and his wife have some thrilling experiences, and these form the main plot of the story. The author, we understand, has been a traveller in Yucatan and is familiar with the scenes he describes, while the events which form the background or setting of the romance are narrated with historical accuracy. Mr. Foulke may be complimented on a well-written, poetically conceived work, which possesses much interest.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—‘The Lost Land: a Tale of a Cromwellian Irish Town,’ by Julia M. Crotty. This admirable tale of Irish life professes to be the autobiography during the years from 1780 to 1797 of Miss Annita Lombard, a descendant of Æneas Lombard, an Anabaptist who had left the north of Ireland for the Munster town of Curraglen in 1699 when William III. was king. He and his family had always been loyal to king and constitution; but at the period of the story the Lombards are Roman Catholics, and their views have somewhat changed. Annita and her three brothers have lost their father, but the mother still lives to care for them, and they are happy when she sings Irish songs to them while accompanying herself on the spinet, or when the eldest boy Thad reads in Gaelic to them and the old servant Eliza and a few neighbours who drop in of an evening. All this and the surroundings at Glensheelan, on the Knock where the Lombards reside at the beginning of the tale, are pleasantly described, as is the good parish priest Father Andrew, who preaches stirring sermons in Gaelic and who tries with the aid of Thad Lombard to keep alive or to revive the use of it among the people. But soon a disturbing element enters on the scene in the person of Dr. Merrick, who comes courting the widow Lombard, and speedily beguiles that unfortunate lady into matrimony, to the disgust and chagrin of her children, for they like him as little as he likes them. No sooner are the doctor and his wife returned home from their wedding trip than he takes to card playing and punch drinking, sitting up late at night and neglecting his practice. These bad habits quickly grow worse, until finally, he gives up all pretence of practising. The poor wife has now a terrible existence, which is ended by her dying in giving birth to a child. The widower leaves Glensheelan and his stepchildren and his own baby boy, and is not heard of for years after. Meanwhile the children remove to their ancestral home at Curraglen in charge of Thad and Annita and the faithful servant. The old Cromwellian town of Curraglen and its inhabitants are cleverly delineated. It is here that the action of the story begins in real earnest. Thad Lombard, the eldest of the family and its support, joins the United Irishmen, by one of whom he is betrayed after attempting to join a French invading force which failed to effect a landing. The author expresses regret that the people gave so little support to the United Irishmen, but the story furnishes little evidence that that fraternity was deserving of support. Poor Thad's last words to Father Andrew are 'Don't give up Gaelic,' but to the brutal Saxon it seems hardly worth while to have called in French troops to assist in 'keeping alive the Gaelic.' One would think the tongue and the pen more powerful aids than the sword in linguistics. We can, however, recommend 'The Lost Land' as a book to read and to be thankful for. Its charm consists in skilfully drawn characters and picturesque descriptions of home life and rural scenery, and in the many touches of nature shown by instances of uncomplaining endurance of suffering and wrong with which it abounds. The writer, in her preface, says of Annita's autobiography: 'In these grey pages there is little gaiety'; but, if the prevailing note be sad, the reader will find no lack of humour in such characters as Mrs. Casey, alias the Barrister, the Careys, the Fargys, the Devines, and Father Meyler Considine.

NEW EDITION.—Messrs. Burns & Oates have sent out a popular edition of 'Callista,' Cardinal Newman's story, first published in 1855. The reader not previously acquainted with the book will be struck by its refined, expressive style, and the history of the heroine, with the account of her ultimate martyrdom, is certain to enlist his deep interest.

Specially adapted for Elegant and Rapid Writing, and for all Styles of Penmanship

THE great demand for these Pens has suggested the production of two extra kinds of the same size and shape as the No. 4 Corresponding Pen, which is such a general favourite. The New G Nib is characterised by a greater fineness and flexibility, so that for those who indulge in fine writing and for Shorthand Writers it will be found unsurpassed. The New J Pen, with a broad but still somewhat flexible point, is richly gilt, and is eminently adapted for large bold styles of Penmanship, being peculiarly suitable for Ladies, whether they write vertically or obliquely. No more durable and delightful pen need be desired.

A Sample Box, containing a Quarter Gross Assorted Pens, sent post-free on receipt of seven penny stamps.

JOHN ADAMS, M.A., B.Sc.

Rector of the United Free Church Training College, Glasgow.

Now ready.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

1. THE SELF-EDUCATOR IN FRENCH.

By JOHN ADAMS, M.A., B.Sc.

2. THE SELF-EDUCATOR IN BOTANY.

By ROBERT S. WISHART, M.A. With numerous Illustrations.

3. THE SELF-EDUCATOR IN GERMAN.

By JOHN ADAMS, M.A., B.Sc.

4. THE SELF-EDUCATOR IN LATIN.

By W. A. EDWARD, M.A.

5. THE SELF-EDUCATOR IN CHEMISTRY.

By JAMES KNIGHT, M.A., B.Sc., &c. With Illustrative Diagrams.

'The scheme is decidedly good, and the student by following the advice given in the introduction ought soon to acquire a fair elementary knowledge of the French language.'—MORNING POST.

'Mr. John Adams is responsible for "The Self-Educator in French," and Mr. R. S. Wishart for that on "Botany." The title of these excellent manuals fully proclaims their intention. Without other aid the isolated student should be able to ground himself well in the respective subjects. The text is as free from technicality as possible, and every difficult point is made easy by full explanation and illustrative diagram.'—ECHO.

'Mr. Wishart's book gives a clearly thought-out and interesting exposition of the elements of its subjects, and provides general readers with an excellent introduction to this science.'—SCOTSMAN.

'We have many excellent handbooks of Botany, but this is one of the best, cheapest, and most accurate we have seen.'—METHODIST TIMES.

'Students who are determined to learn Latin, and who live far apart from a teacher, will find this book remarkably well suited for their purpose.'
GLASGOW HERALD.

Third Edition now ready. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE

OF

Queen Victoria

By SARAH A. TOOLEY

Fully Illustrated. 8vo.

Extracts from Press Notices.

'The volume should meet the wishes of a large public in these days.'
TIMES.

'The book is liberally illustrated, well printed, and handsomely bound. For a lady's library there could be nothing of its kind more suitable; and even men, whose interest lies chiefly with the public and wider aspects of the Queen's life, will find many parts of it attractive.'—STANDARD.

'Altogether a very attractive personal biography.'
PALL MALL GAZETTE.

'The volume seems to contain nearly all the good stories of the reign.'
BIRMINGHAM POST.

'This book is outwardly handsome and inwardly admirable.'
DAILY MAIL.

'Mrs. Tooley, in addition to the ordinary sources of information, has been favoured with many special anecdotes and particulars of incidents in the Queen's career. This gives her book a distinct value.'

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

'The subject will attract and the treatment will satisfy. The writer has been at great pains to collect her material, some of which is from new sources, and she has utilised the information to good purpose. Her style, which is clear and flowing, renders her book easy reading.'—GLOBE.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

SECOND EDITION NEARLY READY.

NEW WORK by 'THE AMATEUR ANGLER.'

Fcp 8vo. cloth extra, 160 pp. with 16 Illustrations, 2s. net.

AN OLD MAN'S HOLIDAYS.

By 'THE AMATEUR ANGLER,' Author of 'On a Sunshine Holyday,' 'Meadow and Stream.'

'The First Edition of this book having been sold out at once, and the type distributed, I would fain have allowed it so to rest and been thankful.

'The urgency, however, of I fear injudicious friends has led to the production of a Second Edition, to which I assented with some misgiving, but the more readily because it at least affords me the opportunity of expressing my best thanks to my readers and the whole round of the Press for the generous reception given to my unambitious little book.'—THE AMATEUR ANGLER.

The following is a selection from Press Opinions already received:

'There is humour in this delightful little book, many shrewd angling hints, glimpses of romantic scenery, and much quiet diversion.'—STANDARD.

'We are always glad to hear from "The Amateur Angler." We remember making acquaintance with him for the first time in "Dovedale," and the recollection is a very pleasant one. . . This book is as pleasant to read as its predecessors.'—SPECTATOR.

'Another of his pleasant and pretty volumes. . . Marked by the same appreciation of nature and the same imperturbable good humour. . . May he long continue to spend his holidays on the Ithen and the Ithon, and to record his adventures for the benefit of those who are less fortunate.'—ATHENÆUM.

'"An Old Man's Holidays" is perhaps the most delightful, as it is the most diverse, of the series which began with "Days in Dovedale," and revealed in its author a humourist as gentle and as genial as Charles Lamb.'—WORLD.

'Extremely bright, and told with a ring of sportsmanlike enthusiasm and love of Nature's beauty which is very taking.'—COUNTY GENTLEMAN.

'There is a peculiar charm about Mr. Marston's writings which it is not easy to define.' FIELD. LITERATURE.

'Adorned by many touches of humour, quiet literary grace, and keen observation.'

'There is always a warm welcome ready for anything "The Amateur Angler" may choose to publish. The world is not so full of sweet and gracious spirits like his that it can afford to miss any of his gentle musings.'—DAILY EXPRESS.

'We have nothing but praise for "The Amateur Angler's" little book.'—COURT CIRCULAR.

'To any overworked business man, pining for a spell of rest, and a whiff of pure country air, I heartily recommend "An Old Man's Holidays." It is better than a week at the seaside, and ever so much cheaper.'—YORKSHIRE WEEKLY POST.

'The charm of the book consists in a certain almost boyish vivacity, and it possesses moreover, a delicate literary flavour.'—LEEDS MERCURY.

Very few who have had anything to do with the publishing of illustrations can have altogether escaped the fee-demanding photographer, and those who have escaped may possibly benefit by a word of warning as to the unsatisfactory condition of the law as regards copyright in photographs.

For illustrating books, magazines, and newspapers, it is often necessary to buy engraved blocks, or borrow them, or import sheets in which they are printed; the greatest care may have been exercised to ascertain as far as possible that no rights will be infringed, and yet in hundreds of cases no sooner is the work or periodical published than the publisher receives a letter from some photographer claiming copyright in some of the pictures, and demanding fees for infringement.

It is, of course, always advisable, where there is any doubt, not to use the picture if its use can be avoided. Also, the party selling the illustrations should be made responsible beforehand for any infringement of copyright.

It often happens that a publisher wishes to give a portrait of some person and asks for a photograph, but it will not do for him to assume because the person sends a photograph of himself that it can be copied and published; the copyright may belong to the photographer, and the question whether it does or not is always much more easily settled before than after publication.

Or a publisher employs a photographer to take a portrait for him and pays the photographer for the one he uses; but the photographer when taking the accepted portrait takes other photographs at the same time. On the death of the person photographed the photographer claims the sole copyright and right to publish the rejected portraits, on the ground that he took them and was not paid for them; the fact being that he was paid for the one used, but may never even have asked for payment for the rejected proofs.

It appears to be pretty certain that the Photographic Union keeps a registered set of all photographs taken by its members, or all that they care to register, and that every book and illustrated magazine and paper is carefully searched for infringements. There is not the slightest reason why they should not do this, and, of course, in every instance where a photographer has obtained permission to take a portrait with the view to his being the sole owner of the copyright, or in cases where he takes photographs of scenes or objects on his own initiative and for his own use his rights should have full protection.

The writer of a book or contributor of an article to a magazine sends photographs to illustrate it, blocks are made, used, and perhaps one or two are lent to another publication to accompany a notice of the book or article, then publisher No. 2, who has merely borrowed the illustrations, gets a demand for compensation for infringement of copyright.

This is rather hard on publisher No. 2, though it may be a perfectly legal claim on the part of the photographer.

The thing to bear in mind when giving a photographer an order for photographs, if you want to secure the copyright, is to have a clear statement in writing from him that the copyright in all the photographs he takes, whether you use them or not, is to be yours, otherwise you may find that the value of the portrait or picture you have been perhaps at much trouble and expense to procure is discounted by the existence of rival pictures, not identical, but for all practical purposes equal to yours, and perhaps sold to some rival publication. Quite possibly it may have been only through your influence that the photographs could be obtained at all. Of course no honourable photographer would condescend to double dealing of this kind.

Copinger says: 'As to photographs, the copyright in non-commissioned works belongs to the photographer if reserved in writing, and in commissioned works the negative and the glass on which it is, is usually considered to belong to the photographer, while the copyright belongs to the person who gives the commission.'

In order to avoid the pitfalls incidental to the present state of the law, as regards copyright in photographs, some publishers employ a photographing staff of their own, and even then we believe they have an agreement with their men that the photographs they take are the copyright of their employers.

Where negatives on glass are borrowed it is well to arrange with the photographer beforehand as to the amount of compensation to be paid in case of breakage. A safer plan still is to have a duplicate made.

If we are correct in our surmise that one of the duties of the Photographic Union is to search illustrated books and periodicals to ascertain if photographers' copyrights have been infringed, might it not be a good thing if the Union would undertake for a small fee to give, when they can do so, the address of the owner of the copyright of any photograph about which there is any doubt?

The majority of photographers are most reasonable in regard to their 'rights,' but there are black sheep in all trades, and we know cases where extortionate claims have been made for infringements or alleged infringements.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.'s series of penny pictorial monthlies for March are distinctly up to date. The British Workman contains an important full-page picture after Sir John Gilbert illustrating an episode in the life of King Alfred, whose millenary is celebrated this year. 'Taking the Census' contains some curious lore and is very timely, while a remarkable sketch of 'A Cyclist at Ninety' is sure to attract wide attention. But perhaps the most noteworthy feature of the issue is an article by Mr. A. E. Fletcher, formerly editor of the Daily Chronicle, in which that distinguished journalist vigorously assails the gambling evil. The whole issue is illustrated, and contains a further instalment of Mrs. Amelia E. Barr's serial.

Sir T. H. Holdich has written a personal record of his work during the last twenty years entitled 'The Indian Borderland.' It is a personal history of trans-frontier surveys and boundary demarcations, commencing with Penjdeh and ending with the Pamirs, Chitral, and Tirah. The book will be issued by Messrs. Methuen in a few days.

The great success of Mr. Menpes's exhibition of water-colour sketches of the South African War has had the effect of causing a brisk demand for his forthcoming book, 'War Impressions,' in which most of the sketches are reproduced in colour as illustrations. Though it is not expected the book will be published for another month, the large-paper edition is already sold out and the small-paper edition has been largely taken up.

Mrs. Charlotte C. Stokes is about to publish a volume entitled 'Shakespeare's Family,' which will contain a record of the ancestry and descendants of Shakespeare. It is written on purely genealogical lines, viewing Shakespeare's position rather as a resident in Stratford-on-Avon and a Warwickshire gentleman than as a writer. Much information concerning the Shakespeares which has not been published before will appear in its pages, and the author claims to show conclusively that, on the mother's side, Shakespeare was descended from Alfred the Great. The work will be illustrated by sketches, facsimiles, and many pedigrees, and will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

* *

'Mr. Quiller-Couch has chosen for the title of his new Wesleyan Methodist novel, "Hetty Wesley." He has elaborately studied the relative literature, including the numbers of the Arminian Magazine. The love affairs of the Wesley family are beyond anything in fiction. A very distinguished theologian of the Church of England has in preparation a volume dealing with John Wesley's Journal, a book which has never had its due, but which promises to come at last to its own.'—The Bookman.

* *

Messrs. Methuen will issue at once an important work, by Mr. Arnold White, entitled 'Efficiency and Empire;' it deals with National and Departmental Inefficiency, and the root causes of the muddle that seems inherent in our public affairs.

* *

The April part of Chambers's Journal will contain, amongst other papers, 'Leniency: Why and How it Failed in South Africa,' by a Transvaal Refugee; 'Two Funeral Processions in the Mall,' by Henry W. Lucy; and 'The Lover Fugitives,' by John Finnemore.

* *

A new novel by the authoress of 'A Summer in a Dutch Country House,' Mrs. Arthur Traherne, entitled 'The Ghost of Tintern Abbey,' dealing with a romantic episode in connection with the ruins of the famous abbey, will shortly be published by Messrs. J. Baker & Son.

* *

The Churchman, which has been edited by Archdeacon Sinclair for some years, will, we understand, pass into new editorial hands with the April number.

* *

'The Passing of Victoria, the Poets' Tribute,' is the title of a volume of poems on the late Queen which Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son will publish in a few days. The book will be very handsomely got up, and will be issued at 3s. 6d. Among

Mrs. Amy Lyons is about to publish through Mr. Elliot Stock a volume of 'Black Country Sketches,' portraying the life and customs of the people of the district during the last two centuries. It will contain many local legends and superstitions, and give illustrations of the folklore of the country.

* *

Mr. Henry W. Lucy has just published, through Mr. Arrowsmith, 'A Diary of the Unionist Parliament, 1895-1900,' with illustrations by Mr. E. T. Reed. The work, which is of historical as well as political and social value, is dedicated to Mr. Chamberlain. It is, Mr. Lucy tells us, 'literally what its title imports.' It was written day by day, much of it amid the bustle of the scene depicted.' Mr. Reed's illustrations are a great addition to the book; it is a pity he did not give one of Mr. Lucy among the reporters in the gallery. There is an admirably full index, which enables one to see what an immense amount of interesting matter is contained in Mr. Lucy's book.

* *

Mr. Andrew Geyer, of 318 Broadway, New York, has just published a 'Directory of the American Paper Trade.' His weekly periodical, Geyer's Stationer, claims to have the largest circulation of any stationers' journal in America. It is so full of up-to-date ideas and 'notions' that we are not surprised at its popularity.

* *

Messrs. Methuen will publish this week a new novel by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould entitled 'The Frobershers,' which is a story dealing with the Staffordshire potteries.

* *

The Rev. Berdmore Compton, Prebendary of St. Paul's, late Vicar of All Saints, Margaret Street, has just issued, through Messrs. Parker & Co., of Bedford Street, a second and revised edition of his work on 'Sacrifice.'

* *

'The vicissitudes of periodicals in these days are like the vicissitudes of those who edit them. A magazine which some ten years ago yielded a profit of some thousands a year was offered the other day to a publisher of our acquaintance for the moderate sum of £150.'—The Bookman.

* *

The Photo-miniature, a magazine of photographic information, for January, is devoted to an illustrated description of 'Gum-bichromate Printing,' by which 'certain effects not obtainable by any other photographic method are secured.' Some of the illustrations seem to have been done by the London fog process—judging from results.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately 'The Queen Victoria Birthday Book,' compiled by E. G. Harmer. Under each day of the year is given a saying by her late Majesty together with a list of events that happened on that day. The volume will be printed in purple and green.

* *

Mr. C. F. Cazenove has contributed to Crampton's Magazine for March an interesting and suggestive article entitled 'To a Young Book-Collector.'

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Extracts from the Report of the Board of Directors for the Year 1900.

'There has been this year a considerable diminution in life subscriptions as compared with last year, and the increase in the revenue of 1900 is really due to the larger amount of donations from some well-known supporters and friends of the Institution as well as from an increased gift from the Committee of the Booksellers' Provident Retreat. The Directors are of opinion that they and the members are to be congratulated upon the warm interest which is still displayed in the affairs of the Institution by many generous donors, and upon the fact that there has been no falling-off in the amount of assistance which they have been able to render to those who have required relief.

'It was hoped that the adoption of the revised rates of subscription in March last and the increased facilities which they undoubtedly offer to members of the trade would have resulted in a very considerable increase in the number of new members. During the year, however, only five have availed themselves of the opportunity thus presented, but the Directors continue to hope that many more will be induced to join, and that this number will in the future be largely augmented.

'The Directors have to thank the Committee of the Booksellers' Provident Retreat for their liberal gift of £225 and for the facilities offered to members of this Institution to spend their summer holidays at the Retreat.

'Special mention must also be made of the very generous donations of £55.5s. and £36.17s. made by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., being amounts received by them on account of infringements of copyright, and by Mr. Young J. Pentland, respectively.

'Thanks are also due to Mr. C. J. Longman, Mr. W. E. Green, Messrs. S. Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., Messrs. J. Whitaker & Sons, Mr. H. H. Hodgson, and Mr. C. E. Layton for their liberal donations, which enabled the Directors to present to each recipient of temporary and permanent relief a seasonable and very welcome Christmas gift.

'The death of Dr. George Carfrae at the beginning of the year rendered necessary the appointment of a new Medical Officer, and the Directors were successful in securing the services of David Walsh, Esq., M.Ch., M.D. Ed., of 9 Bentinck Street, Cavendish Square, W. The Honorary Medical Officers are ever ready to give their valuable advice to Members when required, and to them also the Directors desire to return their best thanks.

'The professional services of Sydney Gedge, Esq., have always been freely accorded by him to the Institution, and the Directors have to acknowledge their indebtedness for his advice and assistance, and also to the Assistant Secretary, whose time and zeal are unstintingly devoted to the interests of the Institution.'

The amount expended on relief last year was £1,288. 15s. 6d. The total assets of the Association amounted to £30,439. 3s. 3d. on December 31, 1900.

'BIBLIOTHECA PISCATORIA' SUPPLEMENT.

'The excellent "Bibliotheca Piscatoria," compiled by Westwood and Satchell, and published in 1883, gave a very full list of publications relating to fish, fishing, and fisheries to that date. During the seventeen years that have intervened a great many new books have been added, and Mr. R. B. Marston has now earned our gratitude by publishing a supplement bringing the catalogue to the end of last year. The original work was so thoroughly done by Mr. Satchell and his colleague, Mr. Westwood, that there was little gleanings to be done in the field in which they laboured; but Mr. Marston has been able to include a few works that had been omitted in the original book. The supplement, which is published at a shilling by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., is interleaved, and a note invites collectors of angling books and others to send in corrections or notes of omission for use in future editions.'—Field.

'THE LITERARY PEN.'

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has published a pen. A box has come for review, and for a time the new pen has cut out our friend of many years, the 'Review' pen of Messrs. Brandauer. Certainly everyone who likes a 'J' pen should try the literary 'U' pen, for it seems to us to be a great improvement on the famous old 'J,' as it writes very smoothly, lasts well, and does not drop ink. One of Mr. Unwin's authors says this new pen will increase the inkshed of the world, in which case Mr. Unwin will have much to answer for.

EUGENE SCHUYLER.

It is just a quarter of a century since Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. published Mr. Schuyler's valuable work 'Turkistan,' 2 vols. 8vo. The book went through several editions, was quoted in debates in the House of Commons, and gained for Mr. Schuyler a world-wide reputation. The writer had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Schuyler in Cairo in February 1890, where he was acting as U.S. Diplomatic Agent and Consul-General. He was then in a very shattered state of health, and a few months later he was obliged to leave Cairo to join his wife at Alassio, but on his way there he was prostrated with malarial fever during a rest at Venice, and on the evening of July 16, 1890, he died quite suddenly.

Now after the lapse of ten years Mrs. Evelyn Schuyler Schaeffer has brought out a most interesting reminiscence of him under the title 'Eugene Schuyler: Selected Essays, with a Memoir,' by Evelyn S. Schaeffer. Among the essays is most interesting account of a visit to Count Leo Tolstoy. A companion volume has also now been published under the title 'Italian Influence,' by Eugene Schuyler, Ph.D., LL.D. Among the essays are the following titles: 'In the Footsteps of Dante,' 'London and Italy,' 'Dickens in Genoa,' 'Madame de Genlis on the Riviera,' 'Shelley with Byron,' &c.

IN MEMORIAM.

The late Mr. D. M. ANGUS.

The late Mr. D. M. Angus, whose death took place in Edinburgh on February 21, occupied an important position in the Australian Commonwealth. He was a native of Caithness, where he was born in 1855. His education was received in the quaint old town of Thurso, on the Pentland Firth, and there can be little doubt that his strong nature received an additional element of individuality from the picturesque, if rugged, character of his environment, and the thoughtful, serious race by whom he was surrounded. When serving his apprenticeship with Messrs. MacLachlan & Stewart, in Edinburgh, his health became an object of solicitude to his relations and friends; acting on the highest medical advice, therefore, he determined to seek his fortunes in another clime. Arriving in Sydney in 1882 he became attached to the firm of Messrs. George Robertson & Co., but after a short time he entered on business on his own account. Soon afterwards he assumed, as a partner, Mr. George Robertson, who had also been an assistant, although no connection, of Messrs. George Robertson & Co. His firm then became Angus & Robertson. For many years the firm has been one of the largest in the Australian colonies, and Mr. Angus's was one of the most respected names in the business circles of Australasia. In consequence of the breakdown of his health last year, Mr. Angus retired from the firm and came to his native country, in which, however, he was not fated to enjoy for long the repose he had so well merited. He has left behind him an unblemished record, and a wide circle of mourning friends.

TRADE CHANGES.

Mr. Edward Latham has opened a dépôt at 29 Paternoster Row, E.C. (St. Paul's Buildings), from which to supply the trade &c. with works of the leading French publishing houses.

Mr. William G. Grieve has just been appointed to represent Mr. Brimley Johnson, as well as Messrs. Bagster & Co., throughout the country and suburbs.

NOTABLE ARTICLES IN THE MAGAZINES.

The Magazine of Art (Cassell & Co.) contains an appreciative article on 'Her late Majesty Queen Victoria and the Fine Arts,' from the pen of Mr. M. H. Spielmann. As a frontispiece a reproduction of the bust of Her Majesty, by E. Onslow Ford, R.A., is given. Other noteworthy articles are 'English Art at Burlington House,' by Frederick Wedmore; 'Gems of the Wallace Collection,' being reproductions of many of the most admirable pictures at Hertford House; and the second of the critical and descriptive papers on 'Sir William B. Richmond, R.A.,' and his work, with specimen illustrations. The Quiver (same publishers) is a good number, containing the commencement of a new serial story by Agnes Gibbon; and in connection with this magazine we may mention that Messrs. Cassell & Co. have now reprinted the December (Christmas) double part, which so quickly went out of print that many were unable to obtain copies.

Cornhill (Smith, Elder & Co.) contains an interesting paper on 'The Treatment of the Sick and Wounded in the Great Civil War,' by Mr. C. H. Firth. A large portion of the information is derived from unpublished documents. Under the title of 'Some Boer War Bulletins' Mr. Basil Williams gives a selection from the official telegrams found by him in a Free State farm-house, and Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland contributes a critical estimate of Sir Arthur Sullivan as a musician.

The Century Magazine (Macmillan & Co.) possesses a great attraction in the opening chapters of a new serial story by Irving Bacheller, author of the successful 'Eben Holden,' recently reviewed in these columns. It is entitled 'D'ri and I.' Bishop Potter continues his interesting papers on 'The East of To-Day and To-Morrow,' by giving his 'Impressions of Japan,' and Mr. Augustine Birrell resumes his course 'Down the Rhine,' covering the stream from Worms to Coblenz. Another paper to which we should allude is the 'Personal Recollections of Johannes Brahms,' by Mr. George Henschel.—St. Nicholas (same publishers) has a delightful article for young people in 'The Balloonist,' the third in the series of papers contributed by Mr. Cleveland Moffett, under the title 'Careers of Danger and Daring;' and in Macmillan's Magazine we notice an attractive essay by Sir Courtney Boyle on 'The Coinage of Words.'

The Nineteenth Century (Sampson Low, Marston & Co.) contains many articles of timely interest. Among these may be mentioned 'The Civil List,' by Edmund Robertson, K.C., M.P.; 'The South African Hospitals Commission,' by Frederick Treves; 'Sham versus Real Home Defence,' by Dr. Conan Doyle; 'The Admiralty versus the Navy,' by H. W. Wilson; and 'The Drama in the English Provinces,' by Henry Arthur Jones. In Scribner's Magazine (same publishers) the entertaining 'Stage Reminiscences of Mrs. Gilbert' are continued, and there is a final article on 'The Settlement in China' from the pen of Mr. Thomas F. Millard. In this he forcibly points out the play of selfish interests which has dominated the situation in China. 'The English Language in America,' by Mr. Brander Matthews, will be interesting to many readers in this country.

The Pall Mall Magazine (Office: 18 Charing Cross Road, W.C.), ever distinguished by the artistic excellence of its production, records a real conversation between those giants of the drama Mr. Arthur W. Pinero and Mr. William Archer, in which the author of 'The Second Mrs. Tanqueray' unburies himself of some candid opinions regarding the stage and its exponents. Amongst other contributions of interest are an article on 'Victoria the Well-beloved,' by Sir Herbert E. Maxwell, M.P., and an important interview with Paul Kruger, by Mrs. Emil Luden. Lieut.-Col. Newnham Davis also supplies some valuable if debatable statistics regarding the cost of 'Men's Dress.' The illustrations of the number are as usual excellent.

Good Words (Isbister & Co.) is chiefly noticeable for a well-written article on 'Edison,' by Mr. J. D. Cormack, B.Sc. There is also an interesting contribution on 'The Building of the Locomotive,' by Mr. James Strang. Mr. Edward Step supplies one of his chatty natural-history papers treating of 'Enemies in the House,' i.e. the death-watch, clothes-moth, and so forth. In the Sunday Magazine (same publishers) the Rev. John Watson, D.D., commences a series of articles with the effective title of 'Respectable Sins,' the first taken in hand being 'Evil Temper.'

The Studio (Office: 5 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden) has an illustrated article on 'Coloured Etchings in France,' by Gabriel Mourey. This is the first of a series. 'Maori Houses,' written and illustrated by C. J. Prætorius, presents many features of novelty. The supplements of the number, which constitute such a marked attraction of the magazine, are reproductions in colours of coloured etchings by Steinen ('La Blanchisseuse'), Richard Ranft ('Salut de l'Ecuyère'), and M. Borrel ('Study of a Head'); a photogravure reproduction of a dry-point entitled 'The Silent Moon,' by Alfred East, A.R.A.; and two reproductions of pencil drawings by Edwin H. Blashfield. 'Studio-Talk' continues as attractive and interesting as ever.

A NEW PENCIL SHARPENER.

The accompanying cut represents the stiletto and slot pencil-sharpener combined, manufactured by the Able and Willing Manufacturing Company, Twenty-third and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, Pa. The pencil-sharpening device is not a toy, but one of the best sharpeners on the market. With it any size or shape of pencil can be sharpened to any desired bevel very rapidly and with entire satisfaction. The tool is made of the best steel, heavily plated, and should be in every stationer's stock.—Geyer's Stationer.

SALE JOTTINGS.

Messrs. Hodgson included in their sale last week the following: Lord Vernon's 'Dante,' large paper, 3 vols.—£13. 10s. SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 5.—THOMAS GENT, PRINTER, OF YORK, 1691-1778

He goes on to tell of his apprenticeship in his thirteenth year, and 'three years with a tyrant, strove to live,' and then he bolted, as has been already told. In the thirty-fifth verse (the last but one) he writes:

And now to ancient Ebor's city come,
Perchance I may some time recline my head,
Till future years shall make me spring in bloom,
Or I, through fate, or all my foes, be dead;
Which way it will, I trust that God will be
My guardian here and in eternity.

Miss Alice Guy, the young woman who 'opened the door to him,' was the daughter of a schoolmaster at Ingletton; she seems to have been a girl of considerable attractions. He was evidently smitten by her charms but he never told his love, because he had no desire for matrimony till he could afford to give his wife a handsome maintenance. His master's grandson, Mr. Charles Bourne, a deserving young fellow, was also one of her admirers. Being now on the point of starting for Ireland, he told Miss Guy that he should respect her as one of his dearest friends; she presented him with a little dog as a companion on the road. His rival, young Bourne, and several of his late companions accompanied him as far as Bramham Moor on May 15, and after numerous adventures at sea, and having been cast away on the Isle of Man, where he remained some weeks, he eventually arrived in Dublin.

During his stay at Douglas he came in contact one rainy evening in a public house with an atheistical exciseman, and when he was innocently praising God for His preservation of his ship's company, he deridingly mocked, and hinted as if Almighty God had no hand in human concerns that way. 'No, no,' said he, 'think not that your preservation was any concern of His.' On this subject they had a long discussion:

'Though I was but young,' said he, 'to engage with a man of his age and capacity, with a sort of mathematical genius, yet I argued as well as I could from the Holy Scriptures. . . . He called me a poor, pious philosopher. The company round us seemed mightily pleased with what I said, called him an atheistical foolish unmannerly fellow, and told him that he had now met with his match—upon this he flung away in a huff.'

The company were very well pleased at his absence and they treated our orator willingly.

When I reached my father's house, as our dutiful custom is there, I fell on my knees to ask his blessing. The good old man took me up with tears in his eyes, blessed me, saying, 'Tommy, I hardly knew thee.' My mother being at my sister Standish's, I went thither, and found her in the parlour, and she as little knew me, till, falling in the same position, I discovered her wandering son. The children, my nephews and nieces, ran out of the pleasant garden to behold their uncle, and, in short, I was as much made of as my heart could desire; but the most fond of me was my dear niece, Ann Standish, a perfect beauty.

Gent soon engaged himself with Mr. Thomas Hume, a printer, but he had not been there long before he met with 'a sad persecution' from his old master, Powell, who employed officers to seize him for running away from his apprenticeship. This, he says, 'was a cutting stroke, and with extreme sorrow pierced me, even, I may say, to the very marrow of my soul.' His father

* Dunton says of this man: 'His person is handsome, and his mind has many charms. He is the very life and spirit where he comes, and it is impossible to be sad if he sets upon it; he is a man of a great wit and sense, and I hope as much honesty. . . . He is a good man, and a good printer, as well as a good companion.'

and his brother-in-law offered Powell a certain sum for his release.

But this made him insist the more; so that, upon due consideration, finding there was no other, indeed no better remedy, that the best of men have their troubles, that King George himself just then had an unnatural rebellion raised in his kingdom, that nothing could be worse to me than Powell's tyranny, . . . I determined to leave my native country once more. About that time I received a letter from my dearest, at York, that I was expected thither, and thither too, purely again to enjoy her company, was I resolved to direct my course.

On July 8 he took leave of his friends. On the 13th he reached Liverpool.

[At this point there is another break in the narrative, and when it is resumed he is on his way to London, having apparently spent some time in York in the years 1715 and 1716.]

Now we find him again employed by his old friend, Midwinter, and fighting Henry Lingard, one of his fellow apprentices.

Lingard swore he would fight me whether I would or no. I gave him all the good words I could to be quiet, but in vain. . . . 'I wish,' said I, 'they that put you on, like a dog to worry me, would appear as open as you do!' 'Dog!' said he. With that he lets drive the first stroke, which obliged me to return his salutation. I beat him heartily in the case room, and then we tumbled, like fighting cats, downstairs amongst the presses. The lye-trough standing at the bottom, he happened to fly with his head therein, when that unholy liquid smeared him to some purpose; we descended down another pair of grades, where the paper-bank tumbled after us for company into the back-kitchen, and, notwithstanding his great strength, it was my happy fortune, through God's good providence, to give him that just, though severe correction, that he ran howling like a dog indeed that had lost his ears to complain of me to his indulgent parents. . . . Afterwards never young persons proved better friends than he and I together.

Shortly after this he received a letter from 'his dear' at York, referring clearly to something mentioned in the missing pages telling him that 'the poor condemned persons had been hanged for stealing three half-pence!' which after all it appears they did not steal. The story told is rambling and confused, but a very touching one, though too long for quotation.

It appears that Mrs. White, the widow of his old employer in York, was so touched by the speeches of the two men, Barron and Bourne, before they were hanged at Tyburn, York, that she determined to print their speeches, in which two men who were the means of bringing them to the gallows, named Jackson and King, were characterised as perjurers. These men prosecuted poor Mrs. White, judgment went against her, and she lost 'near fourscore pounds.' Mr. Gent says:

I should not have mentioned this shocking digression if I had not ascertained how much Mrs. White was affected by my absence. Often would she say to my dearest, 'Alas! had poor Gent been with me! Though young, he was adorned with prudence, and I am sure would not have done anything whereby I could have been hurt in this barbarous manner. How does he do? Does he never write to you? I wonder what's the reason he never lets me know so much as how he lives.'

After this Mrs. White continued for some time in a languishing condition, 'attended carefully by my dear.' Her death was universally lamented.

In the year 1717 he had the great happiness of being made freeman of the Company of Stationers, and on Oct. 9 commenced citizen of London at Guildhall. Shortly after this his parents informed him that his first master, Powell, had accepted £5 for his discharge, with a willing heart, wishing him all manner of happiness. Thus he was absolutely free both in England and Ireland, which made him 'give sincere thanks to the Almighty from the inmost recesses of his soul.'

Now finding himself free, though not quite sufficiently furnished for marriage, he decided to make another trip to York. On telling Midwinter that he was going to leave him, he called him a jesuitical dog and bade him go at once.

'Sir,' said he, 'have you no copies of mine in your trunk which you may think to get printed in another place?' 'Well, master,' answered I, 'this wounds me more than the worst action you could have done by me; here's the key—open it, take them if you find such, and seize everything I have.' Mrs. Midwinter interposed, and eventually things were made pleasant.

He did not then go to York, but he kept up correspondence with his 'dear.' After various employments in London, and after urgent request from his parents, he once more found his way to Ireland. There for some time he was employed with Mr. Hume, and although he could but obtain common subsistence, his affection for his dear parents took all thoughts of further advantages away, till Mr. Alexander Campbell, a Scotchman in the same printing office, getting me in liquor, made me promise to accompany him to England, where there was greater likelihood of prosperity.

Accordingly he agreed to go, to the great grief of his parents. 'What, Tommy,' said his mother, 'this English damsel of yours, I suppose, is the chiefest reason why you slight us and your native country. . . . Whether I live to see you again or no I shall pray God to be your defender and preserver.'

He and his friend embarked for England, reached Holyhead, climbed over Penmaenmawr, and eventually arrived at Chester, where he left his friend. On arriving at London he found employment with Mr. Watts. Mr. Knight reminds us that this Mr. John Watts was the partner of Jacob Tonson. He carried on his business in Lincoln's Inn Fields; it was in this office that a youth of nineteen, who turned out to be a far greater man than Gent, worked for some time, viz. Benjamin Franklin. He was called the Water American, and in his 'Autobiography' he states that he drank only water, whilst his companion at the press drank every day a pint of ale before breakfast, a pint at his breakfast, a pint between breakfast and dinner, a pint at dinner, a pint in the afternoon, and another when he finished work—his own example caused many of his companions to give up this muddling beer and drink hot water gruel sprinkled with pepper.

He was enticed away from this highly respectable establishment by a Mr. Clifton, a Roman Catholic, who employed him in a variety of ways for some time and with whom he got into much trouble. Clifton had found it necessary to move his goods into the Liberty of the Fleet, and there became entered as a prisoner.

He paid me honestly almost every week, as my constancy and my labour deserved. Sometimes in extreme weather have I worked under a mean shed adjoining the prison wall, when snow and rain have fallen alternately on the cases. Yet the number of wide-mouthed stentorian hawkers, brisk trade, and very often a glass of good ale nerved the drooping spirits of me and other workmen. . . . I remember once a piece of work came from a reverend Bishop vindicating the reputation of a clergyman who had been committed to the King's Bench through an action of scandalum magnatum, . . . and though I composed the letters, I was not allowed to know who was the author. The same night these were packed, my master and I hiring a coach were driven to Westminster, where we entered a large monastic building.

They were soon ushered into a spacious hall where they found on a table a bottle of wine placed for their entertainment. They were visited by a grave man in black. He told them to be secret, 'for,' said he, 'the imprisoned divine does not know who is his defender.' "You need not fear me," said my master; and "I, good sir," added I, "you may be less afraid of; for I protest I do not know where I am, much less your person. . . . I shall forget I ever did the job to-morrow and I shall drink to your health with this brimful glass." This set them both a laughing, and truly I was got merrily tipsy, so merry that I hardly know how I was driven home afterwards.'

BEETHOVEN AND HIS PUBLISHERS.

The well-known music-publishing firm, C. F. Peters, of Leipzig, celebrated on December 1, 1900, the hundredth anniversary of its foundation-day, and has published a fine edition of the firm's catalogue, to which is prefixed a letter in facsimile addressed by the great composer Ludwig von Beethoven to one of the original partners in the firm, Franz Anton Hofmeister. As illustrative of the very friendly, indeed almost fraternal, relations subsisting between the composer and his publishers, we think it may interest readers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR; and so, without further preface, give a translation of the letter itself, the precise date of which, however, as will be seen, was unknown even to its writer, who confessed that he was no business man:

'Vienna:

'On the 15th or thereabouts January 1801.

'With much pleasure, my dearest sir brother and friend, have I read your letter. I thank you right heartily for the good opinion you have conceived for me and my works, and much wish I may be able to deserve it; also I beg to return my dutiful thanks to Mr. K. [Kühnel] for the courtesy and friendship he has expressed towards me. Also your undertakings please me; and I wish, if works of art can obtain a profit, that it may rather fall to the lot of real genuine artists than to mere shopkeepers.

'That you intend to publish Sebastian Bach's works does good to my heart, which wholly beats for the great high art of that ancestor of harmony; and I hope soon to see it in full swing [in vollen Laufe]. I myself hope to be able to contribute to it much from here so soon as we hear golden Peace* proclaimed, and so soon as you receive subscriptions.

'As for what concerns our own business matters, as you so wish, here it is, at your service. For the present I offer you the following pieces: Septett (about which I wrote to you already to let it be arranged for the piano, so as to have both a larger circulation and profit), 20 ducats; Symphony, 20 ducats; Concerto, 10 ducats; Grand solo Sonata, (Allegro, Adagio, Minuetto, Rondo), 20 ducats. This Sonata is really capital, dearest sir brother [Diese Sonate (Op. 22) hat sich gewaschen, geliebtester Herr Bruder].

'Now to explain: You will probably wonder why I make no distinction between sonata, septett, and symphony. I do it because I find that a septett or symphony does not sell so well as a sonata, although a symphony ought undoubtedly to be worth more. (N.B.—The septett consists of a short introductory adagio, then allegro, adagio, minuetto, andante with variations, minuetto, again a short introductory adagio, and then presto.) I value the concerto at only 10 ducats because I do not consider it one of my best. "I do not think that, taken all together, you will find this excessive—at least, I have endeavoured to make the prices as moderate as possible. As for the cheque, as you leave it to me, that can go to Geimüller or Schüller. The whole amount would, therefore, be 70 ducats for all four works. I understand about no other money than Vienna ducats, and how much that makes in thalers and gulden with you does not concern me, because I am really a bad man of business (négociant) and calculator.

'Now that sour business is done with. I call it sour because I would it were otherwise in the world. There should be only one emporium of art in the world, where the artist would but have to give in his art-work and take out what he needed; but even thus one would still be half a tradesman, and how could we make head or tail of it? O dear Lord! I call that sour, too.

'And now, may Heaven guide and guard you and your partners! I have been for some time unwell, and it is now rather difficult for me to write musical notes, and still more difficult to write letters.

'I hope we shall often have the opportunity to assure one another how much you are my friends and how much I am

'Your brother and friend,

'L. V. BEETHOVEN.

'Awaiting a speedy answer—Adieu.'

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The "Good Man" of the 18th Century, a Monograph on 18th Century Didactic Literature,' by Charles Whittuck, M.A. The personification of types of character, according to Mr. Whittuck, is one of the most marked features of the literature of the eighteenth century, and recourse is frequently had to the artificial conception of characters for the purpose of illustrating principles. It need scarcely be pointed out that among such characters the 'good man' occupies a prominent place. Practically, Mr. Whittuck's volume may be looked upon as a gradual building up of our conception of a 'good man' from the material supplied by the literature of the eighteenth century, at home and abroad. For this purpose the pages of the Spectator, Fielding's 'Joseph Andrews,' William Law's 'Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life,' Voltaire's 'Candide,' Dr. Johnson's 'Rasselas,' Montesquieu's 'Lettres Persanes,' Oliver Goldsmith's 'Citizen of the World,' Rousseau's 'Profession de Foi du Vicair Savoyard,' and Lessing's 'Nathan der Weise' have been explored. These books represent the different aspects of eclectic virtue, humanity, personal holiness, anti-cant, pseudo-orientalism, and 'enlightenment.' It cannot be said that we emerge from our investigations under the author's direction with a perfectly clear idea of the 'good man's' qualifications—somehow the pieces don't seem to fit together with complete accuracy—but of the interest of these essays there can be no question. They will lead the book-lover into many pleasant channels of thought, and the fact that he will have much to dispute as well as to agree with can but intensify his enjoyment.

From the same.—'Events in the Reign of Victoria, 1837-1901,' compiled by Frederick Ryland. Second edition. Mr. Ryland has rendered a real service by the compilation of this remarkably complete collection of events during Queen Victoria's long reign. It is evident that, as compiler and publisher assure us, this book is no haphazard collection; but that the greatest care has been taken to record events of enduring interest. The arrangement is simple. Each year occupies two opposite pages arranged in six columns, called in the Index A, B, C, D, E, F, and respectively headed in the text Home Politics, Foreign and Colonial Politics, Literature, Arts and Sport, Inventions and Discoveries, and Miscellaneous. The first edition of this book ended with the events of the Diamond Jubilee year, 1897, and was provided with an excellent index. The second edition now before us includes a supplement comprising the events from January 1898 to January 22, 1901, the day on which Her Majesty Queen Victoria departed this life, and this is also provided with an index. This handy volume will be invaluable to all having occasion to verify dates of important occurrences in the years which it chronicles. It appears to be remarkably free from errors, but at page 92, year 1882, under Literature, we note that the late Bishop of London's name is spelt Crichton instead of Creighton, and on the opposite page there is a strangely worded paragraph: 'Murder of the entire Joyce family by Irish patriots (!) at Maamtrasna (Aug. 17).' We thought a patriot was 'One whose ruling passion is love of his country.* Surely no man who loved his country could hope to serve it by murder.

From Mr. F. A. Brockhaus, Leipzig.—'Erinnerungen an Friedrich Nietzsche,' von Dr. Paul Deussen, Professor an der Universität, Kiel. Few persons are so well qualified to write about Friedrich Nietzsche and his life-work as Professor Deussen, who first met the subject of these reminiscences as a school-mate in the upper-third class at Schulpforta, in Prussian Saxony, in 1859. Nietzsche, who had entered the school as alumnus the year before, was fifteen, having been born in 1844. Dr. Deussen graphically describes school-life at Pforta, where the mode of teaching strikes one as being so thorough when compared with the superficial and scanty instruction given in this country, where the system of cramming for examinations is general. Noteworthy is the so-called 'forsche clique' in the lower-second class, of which we are told that the scholars who belonged to it 'smoked and drank, and condemned diligence as dishonourable competition.' Deussen himself only escaped picketing by this species of school trade-union because of Nietzsche's silence as to his having studied after school hours. At that time Nietzsche was of a deeply earnest disposition, shy, reserved, and little disposed to take part in gymnastics or other muscular exercises, to which, indeed, his nearsightedness was an obstacle. All that his schoolfellows knew about him was that he could write good German essays, was a poor mathematician, but extemporised excellently on the piano. He and Deussen used to take long walks together while discussing questions in religion, philosophy, poetry, and the arts, especially music, in which Nietzsche was an adept; and they often retired to an unoccupied schoolroom, where Deussen would declaim with pathos some poem such as Schiller's 'Song of the Bell,' to which Nietzsche improvised a pianoforte accompaniment. In 1864 the two friends left school for Bonn University, where Nietzsche continued until, in 1869, he was appointed professor at the University of Basel before he had taken his doctor's degree. The terms in which Deussen's letter of congratulation on this auspicious occasion was couched led to a temporary estrangement; but the two were soon reconciled, and no cloud ever after darkened their bright and genial friendship until that sad and sudden paralytic seizure in Turin for ever eclipsed the sun of Nietzsche's intellect. After that terrible blow, which fell in 1889, he became once more a helpless child, cared for by his mother until her death in 1897, when his sister took him to Weimar. 'There he continued to live until August 25, 1900, in the house where are preserved the Nietzsche archives, surrounded by the witnesses and evidences of a budding reputation of which he himself had no presentiment.' Professor Deussen could not have raised a better monument to Friedrich Nietzsche than this sympathetic monograph, readers of which, whatever may be their opinions with regard to his system of philosophy, must agree in thinking him a real man, a warm-hearted friend, and a true patriot.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Alfred, the West-Saxon King of the English,' by Dugald Macfadyen, M.A. This excellent biography belongs to the series of 'Saintly Lives,' suggested by a saying of the late Master of Balliol, which aims at giving lives of English men and women who have deserved well of their kind. The author has thought it necessary to preface his work with an apology for any defects it may haply contain, owing to the fact that he undertook to prepare it at the request of a friend whose state of health prevented him from writing a life of King Alfred in time for the millenary celebration of his reign. Mr. Macfadyen states that the book has been written in the intervals of much work, among squalid and sordid scenes, and under oppressive and depressing anxieties, and that it has been a pleasure to him at the beginning or end of the day to find himself 'in Alfred's strenuous and inspiring company; to forget the burdens of a present warfare in watching Alfred wage his.' To us the author's apology seems well nigh superfluous, and we venture to say, after having read this most interesting and instructive book, that the inspiration drawn by the author from a thorough study of King Alfred's life-work has enabled him to impress this biography with the charm of his hero's personality—a charm which, as contemporary chronicles testify, was so warmly felt by all brought in contact with him or over whom he held sway. Mr. Macfadyen divides his work into four books. The first of these, called 'Origins,' tells of Alfred's father King Ethelwulf, of his visit to Rome, which was preceded by that of his youngest son Alfred, who went to the Eternal City in charge of the famous Bishop Swithin, of Winchester, and was anointed future King of the West Saxons at the early age of 5 by Pope Leo IV. in 853, and of the return journey of father and son in 856, when they stayed at the court of Charles the Bald, to whose child-daughter Judith King Ethelwulf was married that same year. The last chapter of this book gives an account of Alfred's inward training as a Christian prince, and of his painful bodily ailments. The second book, entitled 'Engle-land or Daneland,' relates the Danish invasions from the abdication of Ethelwulf, whose subjects refused allegiance to him and his youthful foreign-crowned queen on their arrival in England, and continues the story of the varying fortunes of the English and Danes through the reigns of Ethelwulf's sons, Ethelbald, Ethelbert, and Ethelred I., until the defeat of the Danes under Guthrum by Alfred at Ethandune in 878. Book the third tells of the many ways and works by which Alfred served God and his people; and the fourth and last book relates the King's triumphs over the Danes during his later years, from 893 until his death, which is supposed to have occurred in October 901. A thousand years have nearly elapsed since the death of King Alfred the Great, whose chequered life of work and self-sacrifice Mr. Macfadyen has told so well; yet, vast as is that period of time, and great as are the changes that have taken place in it, there are many points of resemblance between the England of the last three decades of the ninth and the nineteenth centuries. Let the reader refer to Chapter I. of the second book of the work under notice, and he will find interesting particulars of the English militia of the days when Alfred's brother Ethelbert was king, and of the tactics and mobility of the Danes, who in many respects resemble the Boers; and if he will refer to Chapter IV. of the third book he will see how the apathy and sluggishness of the English people frustrated Alfred's plan of national defence. It is a true saying that 'history repeats itself'; so also do newspapers ad infinitum. If, then, the former were read more and the latter less the public might benefit by the change.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'A Bicycle of Cathay,' by Frank R. Stockton. We do not understand Mr. Stockton. We never know when he is expecting us to laugh. No doubt, much of this arises from the pernicious influence exercised over us by his earlier and shorter stories, when he was admittedly a humourist. Once an actor told us that immediately he obtained a reputation for comic parts no one would believe in his capability for playing anything else. Perhaps some consideration of this kind influences us in our estimate of Mr. Stockton. Anyhow, we like him much better in his purely humorous productions than when he attempts to write solid fiction, for it is plain that he cannot lose sight of the amusing aspect of a situation, and thus toying with it he comes to the ground. It seems impossible for him to treat even a question involving the future happiness of a human being—we allude of course to amorous entanglements—with becoming seriousness. The somewhat eccentric rider of 'A Bicycle of Cathay' meets a beautiful charmer at almost every turn of his road, and is always in doubt as to which divinity he shall propose to. This is mere frivolling with a most important subject, for which we are sure no fair reader will feel grateful. Eventually he returns home and marries the doctor's daughter, who was the first to attract his attention. Apparently she was a girl of rather strong character and would be able to control him. Apart from his indecision, the hero's adventures are certainly entertaining, and the illustrations are capital.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'Japanese Plays and Play-fellows,' by Osman Edwards. Much interesting information is afforded in Mr. Edwards's volume regarding Japanese life and character. The title is a little misleading, in that it would seem to indicate that only the theatrical element is considered, but this is not so. Matters dramatic have certainly received most attention, but there are papers on other subjects which are not less deserving of perusal. The author during his stay of six months in the Land of the Rising Sun has evidently turned his opportunities to good purpose, and has made excellent use of his powers of observation. He tells us to a pleasant accompaniment of coloured plates by Japanese artists, of religious plays, popular plays, the occupation of the geisha, native songs, and the festivities attendant on taking the waters and 'afternoon calls.' We learn that the comic operas of Japanese life produced in this country which have generally been supposed to have a strong local colouring are utterly incongruous and absurd. The puppets in 'The Mikado' who sang were not Japanese at all, but Chinamen without pigtails, and their very names betrayed them. 'The Geisha' was much better, so far as externals were concerned, but the plot was as farcically untrue to life as that of 'The Mikado.' Mr. Edwards concludes his work with an account of the position and habitation of 'The Scarlet Lady'—a delicate subject which he has treated with no slight skill, though at considerable length.

'We are gentlemen of Japan,
Our attitude's queer and quaint;
You're wrong if you think it ain't—'

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'The Self-Educator in German,' edited by John Adams, M.A., B.Sc. The book before us is one of a series styled 'The Self-Educator,' edited by the Rector of the Glasgow Free Church Training College, and intended to aid the most isolated student to ground himself in the various subjects dealt with. This German

'Self-Educator' does not profess to teach German conversation. For, as the editor truly and honestly says in his introduction: 'If the student wishes to learn to speak German properly he must go to Germany, or at least he must go where he can hear German spoken, and can join in as he makes progress, but it does profess to enable the private student, who has no teacher of any kind, to acquire the power of reading German, and of writing it with some degree of accuracy.' It seems to us that a conscientious use of this judiciously compiled book will be rewarded by the acquisition of all that it professes to teach. As the book certainly does not profess to teach the student German conversation, it seems ungracious to criticise the directions for the pronunciation of German consonants; we must, however, question the statement that 'b is used exactly as in English except that at the end of a word it is sounded p.' In some parts of Germany b is always sounded like p, and b like p. Everyone, we thought, had heard the story of the hotel guest who, after having asked the waiter at an hotel for Papier, was astonished at a barber (Barbier) being fetched to shave him! But this trivial matter does not detract from the genuine value of this most valuable aid for those who would learn German without a master.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'Duke Rodney's Secret,' by Perrington Primm. Rather an odd collection of characters are gathered together in this novel. In the foreground is a powerful, self-willed man of striking appearance but cruel, vindictive disposition. His chief object in life, beyond that of obtaining money, is to revenge himself on his step-daughter for her mother's treatment of himself, the good lady having innocently enough married her first husband when she believed him (Marmaduke Rodney) to be dead. Then we have two young married ladies—one the step-daughter in question—whose hearts are not in the respective keeping of their husbands, but whose thoughts are passionately devoted to beings of a previous existence, whom they frequently address in soliloquy. Floating round one of these ladies—the step-daughter again—is a lady-killer of a particularly transparent type, who may be very deadly in his appearance, but is undoubtedly weak conversationally speaking. As a species of counter-foil to the machinations of this dreadful man is an elderly lady whose disposition is very much more amiable than her looks. A low-class brutal husband and a self-centred impassive doctor complete the cast of leading characters. On the whole the reader will find himself fairly interested in their doings, though occasionally he will derive his entertainment from a source the author never intended. Exaggeration is a dangerous weapon to make use of in fiction. We hardly think Perrington Primm's reputation will be advanced by his present novel.

From Mr. John Lane.—'A Birthday Book from the Writings of John Oliver Hobbes,' selected and arranged by Zoë Procter. The author of 'The Herb Moon,' 'Robert Orange,' &c., should feel highly complimented by this book, which has been prepared with excellent discretion and judgment; and no doubt her admirers are in sufficient numbers to ensure it a large circulation. Most of the quotations in the volume will well bear pondering over, and quite an absorbing little study can be initiated in tracing a connection between the words of the authoress and the being to whose natal day the quotation is attached. The book is tastefully bound, and in other respects shows that great care has been bestowed on its production.

From Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son.—'The Cabinet Maker's Guide,' by Richard Bitmead. The value of such a guide as that before us is obvious when we learn from the author's preface that the trade of cabinet-making in London is divided into so many branches, each of which takes apprentices; so that, as a natural consequence, there are many workmen who are thoroughly efficient only in the branch in which they have served their time. But, as often happens from one cause or another, some branch of the trade may be slack, and then a workman is forced to turn to another branch, and must be under an obligation to others for instruction. This need of the workman seeking instruction, and unwilling to trouble others for it, appears to be fully met in Mr. Bitmead's clearly written guide which contains instructions, based on twenty-five years' experience, in all the numerous and various subjects of which it treats. The guide is fully illustrated with plans, sections, and working drawings, and should prove invaluable to those for whom it is intended.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—'The Pride of Jennico,' by Agnes and Egerton Castle. It is rather late in the day to dwell upon the merits of this romantic yet bright and life-like story; and, indeed, it is needless. The advertisement of the publishers prefixed to this handsomely printed new and cheaper issue eloquently testifies to the favour in which 'The Pride of Jennico' is held by the public. No word of ours can add force to such a verdict.

From the same.—'Macmillan's Latin Course, Third Part: Easy Exercises in Continuous Prose,' by W. E. P. Pantin, M.A. The student who has successfully negotiated the previous volumes of this course is in the present work introduced to exercises of more difficult Latin composition. Acquaintance with the earlier volumes, however, is not absolutely necessary; all that is required is that the pupil should have had some practice in translating into Latin easy sentences illustrating the use of the accusative and infinite, gerund and gerundive. From an intimate knowledge of what the student requires, Mr. Pantin has been able to prepare a manual of great helpfulness, constant practice in which will render the sorely harassed learner conversant with the peculiarities of expression and construction in Latin composition that so frequently baffle him.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Shadow of Gilsland,' by Morice Gerard. The title of this well-told story may be held to refer to one of two things—either the shadow on the wall which was always associated with the death of a prominent member of the Gilsland race, or that still deeper shadow habitually working for evil in the town, Black Murdock, a poacher of a most ferocious, ungovernable disposition and enormous strength. This ruffian, finding himself thwarted in an act of heartless brutality by young Robin Wellmarsh, a keeper, vows vengeance on his foe, as well as on others who have taken his part. Murdock very nearly carries his nefarious schemes to a successful conclusion, but happily that poetic sense of justice which invariably forms part of the novelist's stock-in-trade prevails, and the story comes to a peaceful conclusion. The book is scarcely so good as the author's previous novel, 'The Grip of the Wolf,' but it possesses many praiseworthy characteristics.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'In the Midst of Alarms,' by Robert Barr. This vivacious and entertaining novel—perhaps as characteristic an example of the author's powers as could be found—has now been issued in 'The Novelist' Library. As thus presented, the adventures of the irrepressible journalist, Dick Yates, and his more learned friend, Professor Renmark, are sure to be keenly relished by an extended circle of readers, and the intense buoyancy of the narrative will win their hearty appreciation. But we hardly think Dick should have been allowed to marry either of the pretty girls of the story. The conclusion would have been more artistic and satisfactory had they both refused him.

From George Newnes, Limited.—'French Life in Town and Country,' by Hannah Lynch. Miss Lynch's contribution to the 'Our Neighbours' series supplies an interesting if not very penetrative description of the town and country life of the French people. But it is a subject that could scarcely be exhaustively treated of within the limits of a small volume, and our congratulations are rather due to Miss Lynch for the admirable use she has made of the space at her disposal. Among the subjects she especially takes up are French rural and provincial life, Paris and Parisianism, social diversions and distinctions, the army and the nation, secular and religious education, home life in France, national institutions, &c. Miss Lynch has manifestly had exceptional opportunities for studying French life and character, and that she has turned her opportunities to good account this volume abundantly proves.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Victoria the Well-beloved,' by W. Francis Aitken. Yet another record of our late lamented Queen. The author has diligently garnered a great quantity of anecdotes of her life and reign, ranging 'from grave to gay, from lively to severe.' The story of the under-keeper at Cumnor, who brutally kicked one of the Princess Victoria's dogs and received two cuts with her riding whip for his pains, may be ranked in the severe class. It were indeed strange if, among the stories contained in this biography, none were found that had not already appeared in print; but we are not soon wearied of reading of one whose life was such an exemplary object lesson to all. So we thank Mr. Aitken for this little book, which contains five good likenesses of her late Majesty and other illustrations, and is equally suitable for a birthday present or a school prize.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'The Tapu of Banderah,' by Louis Becke and Walter Jeffery. 'The Tapu of Banderah,' which gives the title to this volume, is the longest of the fifteen stories it contains. The action takes place on the island of Mayou, off the coast of Guinea, where the only white inhabitants are an English missionary and his wife, a German trader, an English trader, and an American trader. One fine morning a strange sail comes in sight, which proves to be a pleasure yacht, the 'Starlight,' from which disembarks a handsome, fair-haired man, who introduces himself to the whites clustered on the beach as Mr. De Vere, who has come from Sydney accompanied by his friend the Hon. John Morcomb-Lycett, and states that the master of the yacht is named Sykes. But the three white traders know better, and so does Banderah, the supreme chief of Mayou. Captain Sykes is in reality a convict and slave trader named Bilker, who ten years earlier had taken away thirty of Banderah's people and that chief's own brother without paying for them. However, he now goes boldly to the chief and promises to pay him most handsomely if he will help to murder Mr. De Vere and his friend, whose real names are Dalton and Baxter, and who have with them on the yacht thirty thousand pounds in gold, the proceeds of a financial swindle in Australia. What is the final result of Bilker's murderous plot and how Banderah tapus (? taboos) the missionary's house, and thus preserves the clergyman and his wife from being killed by the natives, they who read the book will find graphically narrated. The other stories are of varied interest and are well told.

From Mr. Hugh Rees, Limited, 124 Pall Mall, S.W.—'A New School History of South Africa, with Brief Biographies and Examination Questions,' by the Rev. J. Whiteside. The information supplied in the various lessons of this volume is exceedingly concise and, generally speaking, free from bias, and the book should prove of excellent service in the teaching of South African history. Glancing over its pages, it seems strange now to be reminded that in 1849 Cape Colony was threatened with an invasion of convicts; but so it was. The year 1848 had been marked in England and Ireland by a startling increase of crime, and, the convict station at Bermuda being overcrowded, Earl Grey, then British Secretary for the Colonies, proclaimed the Cape a penal settlement, and ordered the Neptune to sail there from Bermuda with three hundred convicts on board. The reception they met with is matter of history, but ultimately the opposition of the colonists was so great that Earl Grey was compelled to rescind his order, and the vessel proceeded to Tasmania. The same publishers have also issued 'A New Geography of South Africa,' by the Rev. J. Whiteside, which, as in the case of the preceding work, seems calculated to be of considerable service for school purposes. Both these small volumes, it should be mentioned, are new and revised editions of text-books in use in the Government schools of South Africa, and are thus stamped with an approval that is official.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Love and Honour,' by M. E. Carr. The beginning of this novel is lively beyond measure, but it ends in deep shadow. Unfortunate indeed is the man who after seventeen years finds the girl he then so passionately loved, and has since always believed to be dead, the wife of another, and that other a person from whom he has received the greatest obligations and kindness. In such a position is Heinz von Ostenburg, a handsome colonel of Prussian cavalry. At first, when he discovers that Madame Duclos is his old love, miraculously preserved during the Revolution from the guillotine, he discreetly determines to put a wide expanse of territory between them; but circumstances are too much for him, and slowly he drifts into a dangerous entanglement. Matters are quiet for a time, but towards the close of the story the action quickens into feverish intensity. Madame Duclos dies on the march from Moscow, and her husband, General Duclos, hears her last muttered farewell to Heinz, while some letters she has been vainly endeavouring to destroy supply a further explanation of the situation. From this time he lives only for revenge. He first fights a duel with Ostenburg, in which he is seriously wounded but not killed. Afterwards he effects his purpose in a more fiendish manner. Heinz, through events which we have not space to detail, is convicted of cowardice and sentenced to degradation and perpetual exile on his estate of Ostenburg. And so the story ends. It is a promising piece of work, which we think the author will some day improve upon.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Survivor,' by E. Phillips Oppenheim. Mr. Oppenheim in this work has relied upon a much simpler plot than usual, but the fact that his story is quite as absorbing as any of his previous novels shows the great advance that he has made in his art. The material in some respects is perhaps a little stereotyped, though invariably fashioned with remarkable dexterity. We have, for instance, the brilliantly fascinating woman of evil instincts, whose chief purpose, so far as melodramatic fiction is concerned, would seem to be to lure inexperienced youths on to their destruction. But on the present occasion she stops short in her wicked career and develops a genuine affection for the hero. This gentleman has had a past, is possessed of a terrible secret, has changed his name, and is strongly suspected by a vindictive woman of murder. When he first comes up to London he is in imminent danger of starvation, but he makes his way to a newspaper office, and is allowed to write an account of the hardships of the poor from his own actual experiences. The articles are so thrilling in their realism that they take all London by storm, and the author is a made man. The effort, however, has been too much for his enfeebled constitution, and he is laid up with brain fever. Many exciting episodes follow, and the reader is rushed with most enjoyable breathlessness to the end. Mr. Oppenheim is seen at his best in this story, and his capability of thrilling his readers is exhibited on almost every page. The book is illustrated by Stanley L. Wood.

From Mr. Philip Welby, 6 Henrietta Street, W.C.—'Bele Aliz: a Legend of Albury, Surrey,' by Herbert Bell. We cannot say we are particularly struck by the depth of Mr. Bell's poetic muse or the form in which he has given it utterance. His lines run anything but smoothly, and at times are positively abrupt. No doubt much of this proceeds from his habit of carrying one word over to the next line, as thus:

'Within the priory, on the plain
Through which the river wound
Her lover found
Retreat. Again and yet again,'

The little volume is illustrated with a number of pen-and-ink drawings.

NEW EDITIONS.—In the new series of the 'Minerva Library,' Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have issued a reprint, in one volume, of Thomas Carlyle's 'Sartor Resartus,' 'Heroes and Hero-Worship,' and 'Past and Present.' The type of course is small, but this may be overlooked in the advantage of having all three works under one cover, and at a moderate price. The volume contains a capital portrait of the author and a critical introduction from the pen of the late Mr. G. T. Bettany. The same publishers are issuing a new and cheap edition in paper and cloth covers of that popular friend of boys, the late Mr. R. M. Ballantyne. Each volume contains a frontispiece and is excellently printed on good paper. We have renewed our acquaintance with 'The Coral Island,' the specimen of the series which now lies on our table, with almost surprising interest, and our enjoyment has nearly been as great as when we first read it, now more than thirty years ago.—Mr. Philip Welby has sent out a second edition of 'Psychic Philosophy as the Foundation of a Religion of Natural Law,' by V. C. Deseris, with introductory note by Alfred Russel Wallace, D.C.L., F.R.S. The present edition includes a preface by the author. In this Mr. Deseris effectively replies to the criticism passed upon his book that it passes by Christianity with brusque indifference. The volume, it need hardly be said, is one of thoughtful study and penetrative reasoning, thoroughly justifying the praise of Professor Wallace; and in its present neat binding and excellent print it should command renewed attention.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

I. FRENCH LIFE IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

By Miss HANNAH LYNCH. With 12 Full-page Illustrations.
'All that she has to say about the dull doings of French country towns, about French home life and school life, about peasants and shopkeepers, and artisans and concierges, about the Paris literary life and the life of fashion, about the army and the Church, and about the relations of men and women in the world and in the family, is interesting and piquant.'

The Annual Volume of the English Catalogue for 1900

It contains the Full Titles of the Books published in 1900 in the United Kingdom, with their sizes, prices, and publishers' names; also of the principal Books published in the United States, with an Index of Subjects in one Continuous Alphabet. To this volume is appended a list of Works on Angling, Fish, and Fisheries, which supplements the 'Bibliotheca Piscatoria' published in 1883 by Mr. T. SATCHELL. This list includes Works published between 1883 and 1900, and some older Books not mentioned in the 'Bibliotheca Piscatoria.'

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

'It is a catalogue which has virtually no competitor. The arrangement of its contents is very handy. . . . It is only necessary to add that "The English Catalogue" continues to be prepared with every care, and that no library or dealer in books can afford to be without the work.'—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

'We have often called attention to the merits of this publication; and we can only say that, speaking for ourselves, the more we use it the more serviceable we find it. As a complete list of publications of the year, arranged under the names of both author and title, and in such a manner as to fulfil to some extent the purpose of a Subject Index, it stands alone.'—LITERATURE.

'ON SALE OR RETURN.'

CLOTH OR PAPER COVERS.

Does it pay a publisher to send his books to the booksellers 'on sale or return'? This is a question on which we should like to have the opinions of both publishers and booksellers. We have heard it said: 'It certainly pays on the Continent, why should it not pay here?' but the conditions are not the same. To begin with, the Continental publisher supplies the great bulk of his books in paper covers—even expensive books are sent out in this way—of course, cloth bound copies can be had if ordered. Here a publisher puts practically all his books into cloth covers, a much more costly matter to begin with, and if he sends his books 'on sale or return' the cost of re-binding those returned soiled is not less than in the first instance. Why it should be necessary to put all the ephemeral literature published in this country—books which will be dead in a few months—into covers which will last for generations is not clear.

The systems of publishing are different again as regards the means employed to create a demand for a book: the English publisher relies chiefly on publicity gained by liberal advertising and on reviews and notices in the press; his aim is to get the public to ask the bookseller for the book. The Continental publisher sends his books out freely on sale and expects the bookseller to ask the public to buy it. Thus the German publisher pays far less for publicity, and the cost of replacing the soiled covers of his returns is trifling—then when he sells his remainders he does not find them unmarketable unless done up in cloth, as is the case here.

It will probably be said that the matter has nothing to do with the publisher or the bookseller, they simply supply what they are asked for—the Continental reader wants his book in a paper cover, the English reader wants it in cloth. This we doubt; at any rate the English reader takes kindly enough to his handy 'Tauchnitz,' and of late years to the Colonial paper-covered edition. Of course, our circulating libraries want their books in cloth, but it is not a question of supplying them on sale or return.

WOMEN AS LIBRARIANS IN AMERICA.

In the current number of the Revue des Deux Mondes there is an interesting reference to the part played by women in connection with library work in America. Although not confined to females, a great majority of the scholars of the four library training colleges in the United States are girls, the explanation being that youths in the same position in life prefer other industrial occupations.

Every year a hundred of these girl graduates leave these special training colleges and at once find employment, for nowhere in the world is Carlyle's saying so true as in America, viz. that 'Libraries are the Universities of the People.' There, every town, village, every school, every asylum, and even the prisons have libraries attached to them, and everywhere these carefully trained young women are doing work which is of inestimable benefit to the intellectual progress of the nation. During their four years at the library training colleges they are well grounded and have to pass examinations in languages, literary history, the mechanism of typography, applied bibliography, the reading of manuscripts, indexing, cataloguing, &c.; they also in the majority of cases do the work of looking out, checking, and replacing books, and attending generally to the wants of those using the library.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A work which will form a pictorial representation of London at the close of Queen Victoria's reign is about to be published by Messrs. Cassell & Company. It is a Memorial edition of 'The Queen's London.' The first part will contain a series of views of the funeral procession of the late Queen, whilst a large Rembrandt photogravure has been prepared for Part I., showing the procession passing Apsley House. A number of new pictures have been prepared for this edition.

Messrs. Harper & Brothers are publishing next week the reminiscences of W. D. Howells, under the title of 'Literary Friends and Acquaintance.' Mr. Howells was on intimate terms with Lowell, Emerson, Longfellow, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Walt Whitman, Whittier, and James T. Fields, of whom he writes, and of others as well as perhaps no other living person can. This year he has occupied 'The Easy Chair' of Harper's Magazine, which, since the death of George William Curtis, has been discontinued. The same firm also announce 'The Cardinal's Rose,' by Van Tassel Sutphen, a novel which, although published but a month or so back in America, has already called for several impressions.

The fourth annual volume of Mr. Fred. T. Jane's cosmopolitan Naval Annual, 'All the World's Fighting Ships,' will be published about May 1. It will contain over 100 extra pages, and in all some 2,300 illustrations, including directly reproduced photographs of all the world's warships. Special articles on 'submarine boats' have been contributed by the head of the Italian and Norwegian navies, and by the ex-head of the French navy, and other articles by the best-known naval officers throughout the world. Contributors include: Grand Duke Alexander of Russia, Prince Louis of Battenburg, Marquis de Balincourt, Coates of Elswick, Admiral Bettolini, Admiral Boressen, Admiral Cervera, Admiral Hitchborn, Captain H. J. May, Captain Mahan, W. Laird Clowes, C. de Grave Sells, Captain Vieren, E. E. Bradford, Admiral Hopkins, and many others.

Messrs. Methuen are about to issue a new novel by Mrs. Henry Dudeney, entitled 'The Third Floor'; also a 'History of the Midland Railway,' by Mr. Clement E. Stretton, and a new book by Mr. Hope Dawlish, entitled 'A Secretary of Legation: a Tale of Zafia.' It is the story of a gambling scandal in which the wife of an ambassador in the Far East plays the chief part.

A second edition of 'Naomi's Exodus,' by Miss Lilly H. Montagu, will be published next week by Mr. Fisher Unwin.

'The Principles of Vegetable Gardening' is a work by Mr. L. H. Bailey, published by the Macmillan Company. It is designed for the American market gardener, but it is well worth study in England, for, although the conditions of soil and climate differ, the whole industry is more systematically and energetically organised in the United States than with us, and the principles of such branches as packing and marketing, which apply anywhere, are described.

Messrs. Sands & Co. will publish very shortly 'The History of Mary the First, Queen of England,' a work dealing exhaustively with the State Papers of her time, the despatches of ambassadors, original letters, and other contemporary documents, by J. M. Stone. The book will be illustrated with reproductions from old and valuable portraits &c.

Messrs. Bell have in the press a new work by Mr. Bernhard Berenson, on 'The Study and Criticism of Italian Art.' It will contain essays on 'Vasari in the Light of Recent Publications,' 'Dante's Visual Images and his Early Illustrators,' 'Venetian Painting,' 'Correggio,' 'Giorgione's Lost Originals,' and 'Amico di Sandro.' It will be illustrated with 42 reproductions of paintings, many of which have never before been photographed.

* *

Mr. W. J. Courthope, late Professor of Poetry at Oxford, is publishing, with Messrs. Macmillan, two series of lectures delivered in Oxford during his tenure of the chair. The subjects are 'Life in Poetry and Law in Taste,' and 'Liberty and Authority in Criticism.' An interesting feature of the work is the detailed study of the Idea of Law as manifested respectively in French, German, and English Poetry.

* *

Mr. John Milne will publish on Monday a new work by the author of 'An Absent-Minded War,' entitled 'A Common-Sense Army.' The book divulges a scheme of Imperial Defence whereby an efficient army of over 1,000,000 regular troops can be put in the field at a cost of about £4,000,000 per annum less than the proposed Army Estimates reveal. The volume will be issued in the same form as 'An Absent-Minded War,' which work is now about to be reprinted for the fourteenth time.

* *

Most of our readers will recollect those delightful books, written by Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin, 'Penelope's Experiences in England and Scotland,' both of which have met with much well-deserved success, telling of the adventures of three young American girls, Penelope, Francesca, and Salemina. A new volume in the same graceful and delicately humorous style, giving the history of their travels in Ireland, will shortly be published by Messrs. Gay & Bird, Mrs. Wiggin having spent some time in Ireland last spring, where, among other pleasures, she had the opportunity of seeing Ireland's loyal welcome to our late beloved Queen.

* *

Mr. W. L. Weber has completed for use in schools of the Southern States an anthology from the Southern poets. Poe's is the only name among them known familiarly in England, and readers will be glad of the biographical sketches prefixed. The Macmillan Company are the publishers.

One of the last documents presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of her late Majesty was the Report on Technical Education by Mr. James Baker, F.R.G.S. The author has not only received an immense number of articles and leaders upon the subject, including a column leader in the Times &c., but numerous requests to speak upon technical education. Recently at Leeds he spoke to a large gathering of educationalists and a deputation from the Chamber of Commerce of the West Riding, a vote of thanks being proposed by the Principal of Leeds University and the Headmaster of the Grammar School. At Bournemouth he was the guest at the annual dinner of the Bournemouth Literary Society, his speech dealing with his various experiences as novelist, special correspondent, and educationalist.

The Guild of Women Binders has just prepared an album for the Duchess of Cornwall and York, which Her Royal Highness intends to use for photographs of places and autographs of leading Colonials during the coming tour to Australia. The binding is of very highly polished green morocco, with upwards of 100 inlaid coloured flowers, symbolic of the sunny lands of the Southern Seas, and gold-tooled swallows in flight, emblematic of the journey. The cover was designed and executed by Miss Constance Karslake.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is contributing a preface to a pamphlet entitled 'The Children and the Drink,' which he 'warmly commends to the serious consideration of all Christians in this country.' The pamphlet is the work of a committee which has been energetically investigating the subject under the chairmanship of the Bishop of Hereford, and its appearance is particularly well timed in view of the discussion on Mr. Coombie's Bill, for the prohibition of the sale and delivery of drink to children, on March 20. It will be published immediately by Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.

The subject of conscription has come very vividly before the nation since Mr. Brodrick's recent remarkable pronouncement. Mr. Grant Richards has in the press, and will publish on March 19, a book entitled 'The Briton's First Duty: a Case for Conscription,' by Mr. George Shee, M.A. This book is the first attempt made in this country to put the whole question of universal military service before the public in all its bearings.

* *

Mr. Elkin Mathews announces for the spring 'A Song to David,' by Christopher Smart, with an introduction by R. A. Streatfield; 'Poems,' by Mr. C. J. W. Farwell, son of Mr. Justice Farwell; 'Songs of Lucilla,' by an anonymous lady author; 'Sea Verse,' by the Rev. Guy Bridges.

In the April Sunday at Home Canon Fleming will give a very interesting account of Queen Alexandra. The special value of the article lies in the fact that Her Majesty has graciously given permission for the publication of some incidents which have never before appeared in print. The article will be beautifully illustrated.

All interested in Canada—and who is not?—should note that an ably and attractively produced new Canadian monthly has recently begun what we hope will be a prosperous career. It is entitled The Commonwealth. The third number appeared on March 15, and among other articles contains the following: Our Empire's Land Defences (No. 2), by Captain C. F. Winter; The Art of Poetry, by J. H. Brown; Wheat Production in Canada, by John Macoun, F.L.S., F.R.S.C., Botanist and Naturalist to the Geological Survey; and Preferential Trade, by Thomas Macfarlane. Mr. A. Thorburn's pictures of bird life are becoming increasingly popular. A large number of these are about to be placed within easy reach of the public by the issue of a popular edition, in fortnightly parts, of 'Familiar Wild Birds,' the first part of which will be published March 20. Over a hundred pictures by this artist, in addition to numerous other drawings, will be reproduced in colours in this work, which is written by Mr. W. Swaysland. The publication contains coloured plates of the eggs of all the birds represented, with descriptive text by Mr. Richard Kearton, F.Z.S.

Sir John W. Moore, M.D., ex-President of the College of Physicians of Ireland, is writing some descriptive papers under the title 'A Tour through North-Eastern Ireland,' in the Leisure Hour for March and April.

'Handel,' the fourth volume of the 'Master Musicians' series (J. M. Dent & Co.), is to be published in a few days. The author of the new Life is Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams.

In their 'New Century Leaders' series, Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. have included a 'Life' of General Booth, which will be of special interest. The author, Mr. Jesse Page, has had the advantage of a personal intimacy with the General for many years, and as this is the first complete 'Life,' most of its striking incidents will be quite new to the reader. The book is also a record of the history and principles of the Salvation Army, the accuracy of which is assured by the proofs having been officially revised by the Chief of the Staff.

'Another Englishwoman's Love Letters,' by Barry Pain, is the title of a book to be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week.

Mr. Elliot Stock announces the following volumes of verse: 'Collaborators and other Poems,' by A. W. Webster; 'Fireside Poems,' by J. Stratton; and 'Dead Victors: a Poem of the South African War.'

A meeting of the Society of Public Librarians was held at the Bishopsgate Institute on Wednesday evening, March 6, when Mr. W. H. Bagguley, West Ham, read a paper, entitled 'Notes and Queries on Dictionary Cataloguing.' There was a large attendance of members.

GREAT INCREASE OF AMERICAN NOVELISTS.

'The American Copyright Act, during its nine years' life, has been of the greatest benefit to American fiction, if not to American literature in general. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that America drew her chief supplies of fiction from England up to the year '91, because the earlier school of American writers, however distinguished, had a comparatively limited circle of readers, and could not be considered to counterbalance the enormous vogue of English writers. The Act changed little at first, and English books continued to have the greatest popularity, but this popularity was soon encroached upon by the rivalry of indigenous fiction. To-day there are in America, American authors whose books have circulations compared to which even those of the most popular modern English authors are as nothing. Several books have recently attained to circulations of upwards of a quarter of a million of copies, and new authors of merit are eagerly welcomed, not only from the East but also from the West, from big centres, and from quieter and remoter places; giving actual proofs of America's new and remarkable literary activity.'—From Mr. WM. HEINEMANN'S Prospectus of his new 'Dollar Library of American Fiction.'

MOTOR BOATS ON THE DEAD SEA.

The Dead Sea, which for thousands of years has been a forsaken solitude in the midst of a desert, on whose waves no rudder has been seen for centuries, is to have a line of motor boats in the future. Owing to the continued increase in traffic and the influx of tourists, a shorter route is to be found between Jerusalem and Kerak, the ancient capital of the Land of Moab.

The first little steamer, built at one of the Hamburg docks, is about 100 feet long. An order has already been given for the building of a second steamer. The one already built is named 'Prodomos' (that is, 'forerunner'). It will carry thirty-four persons, together with freight of all kinds. The promoters of this new enterprise are the inmates of a Greek cloister in Jerusalem. The management of the line is entirely in German hands.

The trade of Kerak with the desert is to-day of considerable importance. It is the main town of any commercial standing east of the Jordan and the Dead Sea. Its population consists of about 1,800 Christians and 6,000 Moslems. The merchants of Hebron are among the chief frequenters of the markets of Kerak.—The Boston Journal of School Geography.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 5.—THOMAS GENT, PRINTER, OF YORK, 1691-1778

Happening afterwards to behold a state prisoner in a coach, guarded from Westminster to the Tower, 'God bless me, thought I, it was no less than the Bishop of Rochester, Dr. Atterbury,* by whom my master and I had been treated.'

Madam Midwinter now did all she could to get him back, but without avail; he continued to work with the seemingly disreputable Clifton, and a few months afterwards Mrs. Midwinter died, Feb. 10, 1719-20, and was buried in Islington churchyard near the steeple. He attended the funeral and wrote an epitaph, of which this is the first verse:

Lo! underneath this heap of mould
My mistress dear is laid;
A wife none better could be loved,
None chaster when a maid.

On one occasion he was sent by Midwinter to write an account of the assizes at Kingston, and he gives a description of the various trials. One of them was that of a wretched sexton for stealing dead bodies out of their graves and selling them, as represented in 'The Beggar's Opera,' 'to those fleeing rascals, the surgeons'; the sexton was cleared of the new indictment because he had already suffered a year's imprisonment for a similar misdemeanor.

Eventually Gent left Midwinter and purchased some old type and a fount of new pica of Mrs. Bodingham, resolving to venture on the world anew with his 'dearest.' Shortly afterwards he was taken ill and went to bed, but about two o'clock in the morning he was roused up, and, in dreadful pain as he was, dragged out of bed by a King's messenger, and carried off to prison, because he was suspected of writing something about the Bishop of Rochester. Midwinter and Clifton were also imprisoned with him. Nothing, however, was proved against him, and he was discharged. Then, his stock of goods growing larger by careful industry, he set up his press near the Fleet Prison, and there he wrote and published some things relating to the Bishop that made amends for what he had suffered through wrong information on his account; and now he began to imagine that after some little time he should have occasion to invite his 'dear' to London; but, alas! the course of true love never did run smoothly with him. A Mr. John Hoyle called on him—

'Mr. Gent,' said he, 'I have been to York to see my parents, and am but just returned to London. I am heartily glad to see you, but sorry to tell you that you have lost your old sweetheart, for I assure you that she is really married to your rival, Mr. Bourne.' I was so thunderstruck that I could scarcely return an answer. . . . The consideration of spending my substance on a business I would not have engaged in but for her sake; my own remissness occasioned this, and after all she could not be much blamed for mending her fortune.

This disaster, brought about by his own dilatoriness, caused his 'old vein of poetry to flow in upon him,' and so he obtained some vent for his passion. The poem comprises eight verses of eight lines, entitled

'The Forsaken Lover's Letter to his Former Sweetheart.'

The first two lines are a fair sample of the whole:

What means my dearest, my sweet lovely creature,
Thus for to leave me to languish alone?

He got a neighbouring printer, Mr. Dodd, to print the poem, who sold thousands of them, for which he offered to pay him, 'but' says he, 'as it was my own proper concern, I scorned to accept of anything, except a glass of comfort or so. I became so gracious with him and his spouse that if I did not often visit them they would be offended. Yet here I perceived something in matrimony that might have weaned me from affection that way; for this couple often jarred for very trifling occasions. . . . Once he threw a thing at her which hit me in the head and set me bleeding, at which they were mightily concerned, and craved pardon, which I readily granted, though I came not so frequently afterwards.'

This outpouring of his soul in poetry greatly relieved his mind and he set to work again.

He again found employment with Mr. Watts for some time, but left him, owing apparently to his mania for writing. Mr. Woodfall recommended him to the ingenious Mr. Richardson, in Salisbury Court, with whom I stayed to finish his part of the Dictionary which he had from the Booksellers', composed of English, Greek, and Hebrew.

Afterwards he wrought in the house of Mrs. Susannah Collins, where he lived for some time in great felicity—but trouble with her son caused him to leave—and then it happened that the widow of the late Mr. Dodd, who had desired, on his death-bed, to get him to assist her whenever opportunity served, wanted a person to manage her printing business.

As he was disappointed of his first love he had formed the intention of disposing of his materials, and was therefore the more willing to enter into the employment of this gentlewoman, and he soon found that her conversation and fine education 'almost wounded him with love,' particularly as he must never expect to see his first love again.

But see the wonderful effects of Divine Providence in all things! . . . One Sunday morning Mr. Philip Wood entering my chambers, where I sometimes used to employ him too, when slack of business in other places, 'Tommy,' said he, 'all these fine materials of yours must be removed to York,' at which, wondering, 'What mean you?' said I. 'Aye,' said he, 'and you must go too, without it's your own fault; for your first sweetheart is now at liberty, and left in good circumstances by her dear spouse, who deceased but of late.' 'I pray heaven,' said I, 'that his precious soul may be happy, and, for aught I know, it may be as you say, for indeed I think I may not trifle with a widow as I have formerly done with a maid.'

He told his mistress that he had business in Ireland, as an excuse for starting off at once for York, promising her that he would be back in a month; if not, he had left everything in order, so that she might carry on the business with any other person; but she said she would not have anyone in the business but him, and she should expect him to return. Respectfully taking leave of her, he never beheld her again, but he heard that she was very indifferently married.

He took leave of his friends at the Black Swan, in Holborn, and started in the stage-coach, which landed him safely in York in four days. There he found his 'dearest' once more, though much altered from what she was ten years ago, when he saw her last. 'There was no need for new courtship,' he writes, but decency suspended the ceremony of marriage for some months. Even now things did not go quite smoothly: his dearest's uncle, Mr. White, at Newcastle, was very much against them, though his own parents sent him their blessing. His goods arrived from London, adding greatly to the former printing office, and notwithstanding all opposition from the uncle the nuptials were performed by the Rev. Mr. Knight, being the 10th of December, in the stately cathedral dedicated to St. Peter.

Thus ends the first part of Gent's career. We now find him established at York, changed from the late condition of a servant to be a master, from a citizen of London to the like at York.

His first trouble was in the management of his servants, who for a time proved to be as insubordinate to him as they had previously been to their too kind mistress, the widow; but what concerned him most was that he found the widow, his wife, not altogether as angelic as his fond fancy had painted her.

'I found her temper,' says he, 'much altered from that sweet natural softness and most tender affection that rendered her so amiable to me while I was more juvenile and she a maiden. Not less sincere, I must own, but with that presumptive air and conceited opinion . . . that made me imagine an epidemical distemper reigned among the good women.'

However, he wisely remembered that he was but a novice in the ways of matrimony, so he resolved to accept with a sort of stoical resolution some very harsh rules, that otherwise would have grated on his human understanding, and likewise in a Christian sense, to make his yoke as easy as possible, thereby to give no offence to custom or law of any kind.

Then his dear wife's uncle, White, who had a printing office in Newcastle-on-Tyne, gave him much anxiety. He had done all he could to prevent their marriage, and now he vowed that he would oppose him to the very utmost of his power; the servants too, who were most ungovernable before his marriage, proved very little better; they loitered away their time and were quite idle in his absence, so that, says he, 'I became sorry almost to death that I was ever placed over such incorrigible wretches.'

His parents, who had approved of his marriage, growing very ancient, desired once more to see him, and to pay over to him certain moneys he had entrusted them with; so with the consent of his 'spouse, who was then pretty far gone with child,' he yielded to their desire and set forth. He was very nearly shipwrecked, but eventually arrived safely in Dublin, where he found his mother languishing upon her death-bed, and his poor father in a weak condition. He continued with them about a fortnight, but whilst occupied in their behalf he received a letter from my spouse: that her villainous uncle, being come again from Newcastle, was setting up, against us, a printing office, with one Robert Ward, and therefore she desired my quick return.

Accordingly he took shipping as early as possible and after a pleasant voyage reached Liverpool; thence he hired a brave, strong horse and rode home at pleasure. He had not rode, so he says, more than a few miles, but overtaking a good-looking countryman and falling into discourse with him,

I asked him what news was stirring? who answered, 'Sir, I know of nothing more or greater than that this day (November 3, 1725) is to be hanged the greatest rogue in England, called Jonathan Wild. I had seen that thief-catcher several times about the Old Bailey, and particularly took notice of him when he rode triumphantly, with pistols before the criminals, whilst conveying them to the place of execution.'

The next day he continued his journey and about midnight, to the great joy of his spouse (since matrimony the 'dear' has dropped out), who told him that her barbarous uncle had dined with her in his absence, which 'showed the fellow was a perfect compound of nonsense, villainy, hypocrisy, and impudence.' The uncle published a newspaper in conjunction with Ward, who had been his father's footboy but who had married a wife with a fortune and set up as a master printer.

They cried up their newspaper almost in the same breath they ran down mine, with that eager bitterness of spirit which they had instilled into them. . . . His business was to go to the houses of my customers, and substituting his papers in the room of what I sent, and the prices were lowered by one-third; supposing their riches in Newcastle would support through all expenses whilst they endeavoured to ruin me at York. . . . What a vast disparity was now from my former condition in London, enjoying plenty of business and beloved by the best; oppressed in York, and, as it were, prosecuted by a tyrannical villain. . . . But it was not long before his partner, Ward, failed for debt, and was glad to become my journeyman, whom I screened, though he had threatened my ruin.

In October 1725 his dear spouse was brought to bed with a son, who died in the following year. It was a most beautiful child.

'I wished for its life,' says he, 'but I was not very sorry to think of its death, considering what it might have been exposed to through oppression of its woful parents by the villain aforesaid, who was plotting our ruin to the utmost of his power.'

It was in the year 1726 that he got in trouble through the issue of some copies of his newspaper without their being stamped, for which he was liable to a penalty of fifty pounds. He was able to prove, however, that this had been done by a servant of his, who had been corrupted to print an unstamped copy: one that had been stamped was taken from a customer's house and the spurious one put in its place; information was made to a magistrate, and he was sent for, and was able to prove his innocence.

In 1726 he printed some books learnedly translated into English by Mr. John Clarke, schoolmaster in Hull.

In 1728, his unmerciful uncle continued to plot against him, so he felt himself obliged to contrive some business rather than go back in the world; and in 1729 he issued proposals for the issue of a work relating to the antiquities of York. To his astonishment, old Hildyard, a neighbouring bookseller, sent his son John to tell him that if he printed anything relating to the city he would sue him in an action of two thousand pounds damages. The father had printed a book of the mayors and sheriffs of York already, and would have no other to be done.

This put me on viewing the book. I found that his production was mere theft from a lawyer's copy. . . . I returned word by the said coxcomb to the old fellow, that if I copied after such a wretched threadbare piece he might arrest me if he pleased, so turned the blockhead out of my house.

In 1730 the great work was published, under the title 'The Ancient and Modern History of the famous City of York, and in a particular manner of its magnificent Cathedral, commonly called York Minster, and the whole diligently collected by T. G., York, 1730,' and his joy was inexpressible to be told what a kind reception it met with, and he returned thanks to Heaven that he had written what was thought worthy to be read.

I had several admirers, who were surprised to think a person so obscure as I was generally deemed should have the courage to venture on so noble and pious a design; nor was I free from the sarcastic scoffs of others, whose envy was far superior to their judgments; at a perambulation one Mr. Wiseacre reported, in ridicule, what a parcel of stuff I had collected, 'such as old illegible monuments and inscriptions in churches, before the days of their ancient grannams.' 'Aye,' said the Rev. Mr. Knight, 'has he done so? . . . I will buy one of them for my serious perusal,' which he did, and was pleased to tell me that what I had collected deserved a larger volume and a better price. Mr. Hildyard, from an enemy, turned my friend, and bought and sold many.

Thenceforward for some years he brought out many books of his own writing and others. Of these I can only quote some of the titles and dates.

In 1731 he printed a translation of 'Oppian's Cynegeticks' for Dr. Mawer, and the supplement for the Polyglott Bible.

In 1732 he printed for Mr. Thomas Baxter, a schoolmaster, 'The Circle Squared,' 'but as it never proved of any effect it was converted to waste paper.'

In 1733 he opened a printing office at Scarborough; and at York he also published his 'History of Ripon, with the Antiquities of the Most Noted Towns in the County.'

In 1734 he printed 'Miscellanea Curiosa' for Mr. Thomas Turner, 'a work which got credit both to the author and to me for the beautiful performance thereof.'

In 1736 he published his 'History of Hull.' There was also published in the same year a work by Mr. Francis Drake, entitled 'Eboracum,' in 2 vols. In this work the author patronisingly says that—he has nothing to say to Mr. Gent's work, but only to assure my contemporary historian that I have stolen nothing from his laborious performance. Whereas, Mr. T. G., as author, printer, and publisher of the work himself, endeavouring to get a livelihood for his family, deserves commendation for his industry.

To this Gent replies at some length, 'As to his stealing anything of mine, that expression, so exceedingly vulgar, might well have been spared in a polite doctor, since such are seldom charged with theft, except stealing people out of their graves.'

In 1737 he studied music on the harp, flute, and other instruments.

In 1738 he wrote and printed a pastoral dialogue on the death of the Rt. Hon. and illustrious Charles Howard, Earl of Carlisle, who died at Bath, May 1, 'which poem was universally received with kindness and approbation.'

In January 1739, the frost being extremely intense, the rivers became so frozen that he printed names on the ice. He set up a new kind of press, only a roller wrapped about with blankets. He was reading the verses he had made to follow the names, wherein King George was most loyally inserted—the ice suddenly cracked and all ran away, but not hearing he remained—but nothing happened.

In 1741, having printed the News for several years, for want of encouragement he was obliged to give it up.

In the two following years he seems to have been engaged in litigation about his premises, and in 1744, when his affairs were beginning to decline, his narrative closes, and it does not appear that he ever continued the story. 'It would,' says the editor of the volume, 'it is to be feared, have been but a narrative of a course of life which was bound in shallows and in miseries. . . . New and more enterprising printers arose in that northern metropolis, till at length Gent's press became in little request. His topographical resources were exhausted in his three works on York, Ripon, and Hull, and when he wrote his work on 'The History of the East Window in York Minster,' which he published in 1762, he was sinking under age and necessity.'

A portrait was painted of him by one of the Drakes, a family who were particularly attentive to him in his old age, and was exhibited for his benefit.

He died at his house in York on May 19, 1778, in the eighty-seventh year of his age, and was interred in the church of St. Mary-le-Belfrey.

CANADIAN BOOKSELLERS AND STATIONERS.

The annual meeting of the Booksellers and Stationers' Section of the Board of Trade was held at Toronto, January 24, when the members were entertained at dinner by the Chairman, Mr. W. J. Gage, at the National Club. Those present, in addition to the host, were: Messrs. Richard Brown, Rev. Dr. Briggs, A. S. Irving, — Ellis, A. W. Thomas, S. R. Hart, Geo. Warwick, W. P. Gundy, D. A. Rose, Geo. Spence, Wm. Copp, Fred J. Campbell, W. J. Davis, F. H. Gage, T. A. Brown, J. T. Hornbrook, E. A. Wills. The Chairman, in his annual address, announced that during the year there had been a steady development of the publishing, book, and stationery business in Canada. The present satisfactory condition of the publishing trade as compared with a few years ago he attributed largely to the copyright arrangement with the United States and the advent of better times. The improved mechanical appearance of Canadian publications was noted with pleasure. Canadian copyright, however, is still in an unsatisfactory condition, and vigorous and determined action by the Board of Trade to obtain Imperial sanction to the copyright legislation passed by the Dominion Government is hoped for. During the past year the paper business in Canada has been exceptionally prosperous. Paper mills have been six months behind in filling their orders. To meet the demand the old mills are increasing their capacity, new mills are being erected. Stationers who make the paper up into different forms for practical use have shared in the general prosperity and found it necessary to increase their facilities for meeting the demand. The paper trade in Canada will, no doubt, shortly be one of our greatest industries. We have an unlimited water power, an inexhaustible supply of raw material in our pulpwood forests. Capitalists from the United States, Great Britain, and Europe are investing millions of dollars in this industry in Canada, and some of the largest pulp and paper mills in the world are being established here.

Twenty-five years ago when he started in business in Toronto, the Chairman said, the great bulk of our paper came from Great Britain, and English travellers regularly visited the Canadian trade to supply our demands; to-day Canadian paper mills can meet all our requirements, and some of them have their London offices.—Geyer's Stationer.

THE COPYRIGHT OF 'L'AIGLON' IN AMERICA. IMPORTANT U.S. TREASURY DECISION.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—We have sent you to-day, under separate cover, a copy of the Publishers' Weekly, dated February 16, 1901, containing decision of the Attorney-General in relation to the matter of 'L'Aiglon.' The question presented to him involved the International Copyright Act of March 3, 1891, in so far as that Act related to the subject of protection to books wholly in a foreign language printed in the United States, and copyrighted therein under the provisions of the aforesaid law. By reason of some wording in our Tariff Act the question was raised whether the author or proprietor of a book wholly in a foreign language, even though he had complied with every part of our copyright law, could protect himself against unauthorised importations, or even pirated editions, of his book. The decision affirms what was the intent of the International Copyright Act—to extend protection to authors for their books in the United States in whatever language printed, provided they were printed under the provisions of the manufacturing clauses of said Act.

This is the first time that this question has been passed upon by any of the public departments. We believe the decision will be a matter of interest to you, and therefore bring the subject to your attention.

Yours, very respectfully,
BRENTANO'S.

31 Union Square, New York:
February 26.

The following is the gist of the decision:—

'The Attorney-General expresses the opinion that although "L'Aiglon" was copyrighted as a dramatic composition, the work is none the less a book, and, as such, is subject to prohibition, notwithstanding the fact that it is printed exclusively in a foreign language. This conclusion appears to have been reached through the final proviso in Section 4956, which, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, makes clear the intention of Congress, viz. to permit the importation of a book in the foreign original language only when there is not an American copyright of the book in that language. Otherwise a book in a foreign language could not be effectively copyrighted in the United States, and the reciprocal privileges extended to citizens of France by the executive proclamation of July 1, 1891, would be rendered nugatory. The Attorney-General does not state that the holder of an American copyright on a work in French would be entitled to prevent the importation, say, of a Spanish or German version, nor that the prohibition or importation extends to books and music in raised print, used exclusively by the blind; books, engravings, maps, &c., more than twenty years old, or imported for the use of the United States, or of any educational, literary, or religious institution, &c., or books forming part of the household effects of persons from foreign countries.

'In view of the foregoing, the Collector of Customs is instructed to prohibit entry of the book "L'Aiglon," imported in violation of the copyright rights of the Brentano's.'

THE MÆDIAVAL TOWN SERIES.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—We beg to thank you for the many favourable notices that you have given us in the past, and trust that our books will continue to meet with your approval. We should like to point out, however, that the use of the word 'little' in connection with the volumes of the 'Mædiaval Town Series' (vide 'Rome' in the issue of March 2) might lead to misconception. These books are as small in bulk as thin tough paper and small clear type will make them, but in the treatment of the subject we venture to think that they can in no way be considered little. 'Rome,' for instance, contains about 120,000 words, and is thus as thorough in its treatment of the subject as many far larger books on the same subject. Seeing our standpoint in this matter, you will doubtless be good enough in future reviews to avoid the use of a word that might give a misleading idea of the objects of the series.

Yours faithfully,
J. M. DENT & Co.

[We hope the reviewers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR will take note of Messrs. Dent's remarks. We certainly have no wish to give a misleading impression as regards their series.—ED. P.C.]

M. BRUNETIÈRE ON RECENT LITERATURE.

M. Ferdinand Brunetière contributes to a volume entitled 'Un Siècle: Mouvement du Monde de 1800 à 1900,' the joint work of a committee of writers, scientists, and ecclesiastics, having for its president Mgr. Pechenard, and published by Oudin, of Paris, an essay on the national literatures of the departed century. He notes the invasion of translations from foreign languages of works by authors differing from each other in so many respects as Björnson, Mrs. Humphry Ward, John Ruskin, and others, and he argues as follows: It is true that national literatures have attempted in this century to concentrate in themselves and to guide development in accord with their traditions; but is not even that a proof of their reciprocal penetration and of the fear they feel of thus losing the most original of their native qualities? They have just sought in the excess of their nationalism a means of resisting and becoming inflexible to the tendency which is drawing them towards cosmopolitanism. But does a drama by Ibsen differ so much as people say from one by Tolstoy—'An Enemy of the People' from the 'Kreutzer Sonata'? Have not Dickens's novels almost as many readers in Paris as those of M. Paul Bourget and Pierre Loti have in New York? The best history we have of the Italian Renaissance is that written by John Addington Symonds, an Englishman; and we have in French more than one work on Voltaire, on Rousseau, and on Diderot, but there is not one, perhaps, which is worth those by Strauss, Rosenkranz, and Mr. John Morley. The English poet Dante Gabriel Rossetti and his brother, who is a distinguished English critic, were the sons of an Italian poet and critic. On the other hand, is it not France, by the voice of M. de Vogüé, that has almost revealed to Italy itself the author of 'The Innocent and the Triumph of Death,' and to all Europe the names of Tolstoy and of Dostoevsky?

He then goes on to show, what is certainly no new thing to those who have any sort of knowledge of international literature; viz. that literary Europe has through the century had some great writer to follow. 'Was not all literary Europe for a moment (sic) Byronian and is it not now quite Tolstoyan? So that unless frontiers bristle with literary custom-houses as they do at this moment with bayonets and cannons, that which has been begun will be consummated and intellectual cosmopolitanism will level national differences. The social function of "Literature" will change its nature, and instead of maintaining traditions which divide, because they are only born from the necessity of opposing in order to "pose" (de s'opposer pour se poser), it will not borrow from any of them, and will only retain, in order to blend in one living universality the best, the purest, and the most original. This would be the end of all literature.'

Considering the influence exercised in former days on international literature by writers and books, not even yet quite forgotten—such as Defoe's 'Robinson Crusoe,' Swift, Sterne, Goldsmith's 'Vicar' and Sir Walter Scott, to name a few English classics; Goethe, Schiller, and Lessing amongst German; and Molière, Racine, Corneille, and Voltaire amongst French writers; without literature having yet perished—we cannot be persuaded to take so gloomy a view of its future as that of the distinguished writer of the interesting essay just quoted.

JACK AND THE PLUCKY OLD ZULU.

Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd. have just published 'A Sack of Shakings,' by Frank T. Bullen. Most of the essays brought together in the volume have been published in the Spectator, and we are very glad to have them in this handy and handsome form. The essays cover a wide range of subjects all treated with the fresh, breezy vigour which made the author of the 'Cruise of the "Cachalot"' popular.

Here is a capital story from 'Our Amphibious Army':—

JACK AND THE ZULU.

'Is it any wonder that Jack is proud of his shore fighting record? . . . His effervescent humour never seems to desert him, as the following anecdote fairly well illustrates. It was at Gungahlovo, and the Naval Brigade was face to face with an apparently overwhelming force of Zulus, numbers of whom were armed with rifles. The sailors were reserving their fire. Forth from the Zulu host stepped a warrior laden with an ancient firearm, which he calmly mounted upon a tripod in the open, while the sailors looked on admiring his pluck, but wondering much what he was proposing to do. At last one jovial tar suggested that their photographs were going to be taken, and, by common consent, no shots were sent at the supposed photographer. Having loaded his piece with great deliberation, the Zulu primed it, sighted, and leaning hard against its breech he fired. The recoil—for the thing was much overloaded—knocked him head over heels backward, while a great roar of laughter went up from the delighted sailors.'

One is almost sorry to learn that the 'plucky old bounder,' as Jack called him, had to be annihilated soon after when charging with an impi of his countrymen.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'Sesa,' by Henry St. John Raikes. From the murderous proceedings of a powerful secret society in Paris the author has evolved a very thrilling story. Much of the excitement arises from the mysterious way in which the victims come by their death, and the explanation is withheld with admirable judgment until the last few pages of the book. Thus the reader is continuously kept in a feverish state of expectation. We have read many novels dependent for their interest on the doings of the anarchist class, but seldom anything more blood-curdling and startling than this.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—The first and Second Parts of 'Henry IV.' have now been added to the tastefully produced 'Chiswick Shakespeare,' illustrated by Mr. Byam Shaw. This excellent edition well maintains its good qualities of printing, paper, and binding, and in the matter of introduction and notes is well served by Mr. John Dennis. The illustrations strike us as a little unequal, but we may warmly commend Mr. Shaw's embodiment of Sir John Falstaff, and there is also a little picture of the Inn Yard at Rochester which is very good.

From the same.—'Piero della Francesca,' by W. G. Waters, M.A. In his contribution to 'The Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture' series Mr. Waters has followed very much the same method of treatment as adopted by previous writers in this library. In the first place he has supplied some biographical details in regard to the painter's early life, then passed to a consideration of his most celebrated pictures, with an account of the circumstances that led to their production, and from this proceeded to an estimate of Piero's place in Art, his influence and power, and the result of his work. The volume is lavishly illustrated with reproductions of paintings. It has sometimes been urged against Piero that he was subject in his method to outside influences—that there was frequently a lack of what, for want of a better word, we may call individuality in his conceptions. That he was indebted to Domenico Veneziano and Andrea Castagno is no doubt true, but there are touches of genius in Piero's work, as Mr. Waters amply proves, that only arose from himself. The volume will be found highly interesting by all who are concerned in the early Italian school of painting, and it is a worthy addition to the 'Great Masters' series.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates, Ltd.—'The Jubilee Manual; being the Meditations of Bp. Bossuet, together with approved Prayers and an Instruction by Father Thurston, S.J.' In his preface Father Thurston states that the object of this little book is purely devotional. It is intended as a guide and an aid to all who may wish to carry out as devoutly as possible the conditions prescribed by Pope Leo XIII. to all desirous of obtaining the spiritual privileges of the Jubilee indulgence of the Holy Year 1900, 'which were only to be gained by a pilgrimage to Rome, but are now for six months placed within reach of the whole body of the faithful.' An interesting prefatory note tells us the 'Meditations' seem to have first appeared in print in 1696, but that Bossuet had already published certain 'Instructions et Prières' for the Jubilee of 1692. The 'Meditations,' as translated in the volume before us, are taken from the second edition of 1702, for which the Abbé Le Dieu claimed credit, he having suggested its being set in smaller type so as to be sold more cheaply and be more generally useful; the first edition of less than 150 pages duodecimo having cost four francs in sheets, and six francs in a binding of marbled paper!

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Annals of Politics and Culture (1492-1899),' by G. P. Gooch, M.A. The object of the author has been to supply a 'concise summary of modern times, embracing the life of mankind in its entire range of thought and action.' The scheme followed shows some originality. The left-hand page deals with politics, the right-hand page with culture. The politics and culture of each year are as nearly as possible level, so that the reader may see at a glance what was taking place in the chief departments of thought and action at any given moment. Each paragraph is numbered, and the student wishing to trace the history of a country, a literature, a science or an art, has only to turn to the index and find under the particular subject the paragraph numbers of the entries relating to it. The volume seems to have been very thoroughly prepared, and in the important work of revision the author has enjoyed the valuable assistance of such experts as Professor Jebb, Dr. Garnett, Mr. Edmund Gosse, Mr. Archibald, Mr. Rouse Ball, Mr. Arthur Berry, Mr. J. B. Mullinger, Mr. Sedgwick, Mr. W. M. Fletcher, and others. The idea and plan of the book are due to Lord Acton, who has also supplied an introductory note. In this he points out how necessary it is, in any work dealing with the progress of those public events which constitute the essential facts of history, that due attention should be paid to the advancement of learning and the kindred arts. History, he very justly observes, embraces ideas as much as events, and derives its best virtues from regions beyond the sphere of State. We have every sympathy with Mr. Gooch in the task he has set himself to perform, and we congratulate him on having produced so able and satisfactory a volume.

From the same.—'Education in the Nineteenth Century: Lectures delivered in the Educational Section of the Cambridge University Extension Summer Meeting in August 1900,' edited by R. D. Roberts, M.A. Several distinguished writers whose names are chiefly identified with the subject of education are found in this volume. The Rev. H. Montagu Butler, D.D., at one time Head Master of Harrow, discusses the subject of 'Christian Work in Public Schools'; Sir Joshua Fitch, formerly Chief Inspector of Training Colleges, writes of 'Primary Education in the Nineteenth Century'; Professor Jebb has something to say of 'The University Extension Movement'; Mrs. Henry Sidgwick expresses her opinions of 'The Higher Education of Women'; Mr. R. P. Scott, Head Master of Parmiter's School, considers the question of 'Secondary Education Legislation, with Special Reference to Problems awaiting Solution'; and there are also contributions on important aspects of educational work from Miss Agnes Ward, Miss F. Gadesden, Professor Withers, Mr. C. W. Kimmins, Sir Philip Magnus, Miss E. P. Hughes, Mr. M. E. Sadler, and Professor W. Rein of the University of Jena. The book contains the well-considered opinions of a number of men and women who have made the subject of education their life-work, and their views are bound to be listened to with the utmost deference and attention.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—'Her Majesty's Tower,' by W. Hepworth Dixon, with an introduction by the Rev. W. J. Loftie, B.A. Part 1 of the serial issue of this well-known work, which the publishers have put on the market, has reached us. It is excellently produced, on good paper, and with large clear type. The work will be completed in sixteen parts at the modest figure of sixpence each part, and it will include the same number of coloured plates and a plan. Mr. Dixon's book was not merely attractive for an age but for all time, and readers should find its pages just as engrossing now as when first published, while the popular price at which it is now issued should carry it into many homes where it has been previously unknown.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Ship's Adventure,' by W. Clark Russell. Is it possible for a man, a woman, and a dog to bring a big full-rigged ship across the Atlantic in face of rough weather and the other obstacles that are common to an ocean roadway? Mr. Russell thinks it is, and he sees more to wonder at in the mysterious good fortune of the ocean-tramp of to-day that washes through the Bay of Biscay without her funnel, and quietly discharges her cargo without anyone feeling one penny the worse, than in this adventure of the Australian clipper and its short-handed crew. But before the hero and heroine are thrown together on its deck, they have had many exciting experiences. To be burnt out, drugged, kidnapped, shipwrecked, on a derelict with a madman, are happily disasters that befall few people, though extremely interesting to read of in fiction; but such are the thrilling events that happen to this devoted couple. For the rest, we may say that the book, like every work proceeding from Mr. Clark Russell's pen, thoroughly reflects the minutiae of sea life, and as we read it we seem almost to see the white-crested green waves and to hear the wind as it whistles among the ship's sails.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Rival Claimants,' by Sarah Tytler. It would be almost impossible for Miss Tytler, with her pleasant cultivated style and delicate appreciation of character, to write a novel that should not to some extent be interesting, and, though we have read several of her works that we like better than 'Rival Claimants,' there is a brightness and human flavouring about the story that are certain to win admiration. Miss Tytler has constructed her plot from somewhat unpromising material with the deftness of an experienced hand.

From Messrs. Thomas De la Rue & Co., Ltd.—'Bridge Abridged; or, Practical Bridge,' by W. Dalton. In the introduction to this handy and prettily got-up book the author tells how in the autumn of 1894 the game of Bridge was shown by Lord Brougham to three or four men at the Portland Club; how, to use an Americanism, it 'caught on'; how it spread to other clubs, and to-day almost supersedes whist. He also tells us that whist fell because it is too scientific and is a game of too narrow limitations; whereas Bridge is 'essentially a game of quick perception and individual enterprise, as against recognised methods of combination, and established leads and rules of play. Besides this, it possesses strongly the gambling element so dear to the inmost heart of every Englishman.' Mr. Dalton does not claim for his little work that it is a handbook to Bridge, but only that it may be a possible means of assistance to the many who know the outlines and rules of the game but lack the practice which alone can teach the best way of playing the cards. 'Bridge Abridged' is so simply and clearly written that we have no doubt the aim of its author will be attained.

From Mr. David Douglas, Edinburgh.—'Time's Fool: an English Idyll.' The unfortunate results of an unequal marriage—of the union of a bright, winning Cornish girl with a reserved, conscientious man much above her in position—are set forth in this novel with a sympathetic insight that is bound to exercise a strong fascination over the reader. The story itself is as old as the hills, but in its new setting it derives fresh interest from the unaffected style of the writer.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden.—'At Home with Tommy Atkins,' by Callum Beg. This little book supplies a warm tribute to the merits of the private soldier, and in many ways throws an interesting light on his regimental life. There are many illustrations exhibiting 'Tommy' both at work and play, and the resolution of his character is well displayed in each.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'The Man who Forgot: a Strange Experience,' by John Mackie. In a brief preface Mr. John Mackie says: 'The strange plot of this story was an actual experience coming under my personal observation.' The action of this well-constructed tale takes place on board the 'Derunda,' one of the British India Company's boats. The principal characters are: the Man who Forgot, whose name on the list of passengers is Goodacre; Mr. Tipple, a detective in search of a well-known dynamiter; a good-looking young lady calling herself Mrs. Wilson, but who is nevertheless travelling in charge of her guardian, an exceedingly unpleasant valetudinarian yeoman Boulter, who makes himself generally disagreeable and acts very despotically towards his so-called ward, whom he always orders to wear her wedding ring and not to appear on deck. As the story progresses the reader feels more and more convinced that Muriel Wilson is an unmarried woman, while she displays an increasing sympathy with Goodacre, who has lost all memory of his past life as the result of a terrible blow on the head which had been dealt him by a robber. Tipple, however, is convinced that the Man who Forgot is Prescott, the dynamiter. As may be supposed, these mysteries and mistakes lead to numerous complications and surprises. No ordinary descriptive faculty is shown in the delineation of the characters, in the scenes on board the steamer, and in sea and land pictures, particularly that remarkable example of word-painting the eruption of Krakatoa, with which this exciting romance appropriately comes to an end.

From the Leadenhall Press.—'Madame Marie, Singer,' by Ester Dale. Several subtle touches of description in this novel indicate that the writer is intimately connected with the musical profession herself, and thoroughly understands the life of a public singer. As much, unfortunately, cannot be said for her craft as a novelist. She has gathered together a quantity of promising material, but through want of sufficient skill it dies away almost to nothingness in her hands. Nor has the general production of her work in any way helped her; it seems rather to emphasise the efforts of the amateur. We are sorry for this because we recognise in Miss Dale certain qualities of ready expression, observation, and feeling that should render her with further experience and study a very acceptable writer. And, as it is, we are far from saying that her story is not interesting; only her evident capability for better things has rendered us a little rigidly critical.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'Gibraltar: a National Danger,' by Thomas Gibson Bowles, M.P. In this pamphlet the author shows the dangers for Great Britain likely to accrue from the works now in course of construction at Gibraltar; points out how certain alterations might be made which would diminish these dangers; and pleads for a suspension of the works until the entire matter has been reconsidered and inquired into. (At the time of writing Parliament has granted an inquiry, and the progress of the works has been stopped.) Mr. Bowles enters very thoroughly into the question, and he is assisted in the matter of explanation by several illustrations. One of his chief points is that the works should have been placed on the eastern rather than the western side of the Rock, and he urges that even now the sum remaining in hand should be preferably spent wholly or partly in works on the eastern side, while at the very least the possibility of making a harbour on that side should be seriously considered. In view of the coming inquiry into the question, Mr. Bowles's little book should attract a large amount of attention.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Sacred Fount,' by Henry James. Mr. Henry James has such a masterly style that all he writes is worth reading. Nevertheless we must confess to a feeling of disappointment on reading this book. The hero, who remains anonymous from beginning to end, has been invited to a large party at a place called Newmarch. On the platform of the railway station from which his train is to start the nameless hero sees a friend of the house at Newmarch, one Gilbert Long, whom he had often met there but who had always failed to know him elsewhere. To the surprise of the hero, our storyteller, he is recognised by Long, who joins him in a compartment, bringing with him a lady unknown to the hero but whom he presently recognises by her voice to be a Mrs. Brissenden. Then he perceives that since he last saw her she has changed extraordinarily. 'How could a woman who had been plain so long become pretty so late?' he asks himself. For she is on the shady side of forty; but had married, four or five years before, Guy Brissenden, who is not yet thirty at the time of this railway journey. This information about Mrs. Brissenden is imparted by Gilbert Long. Then the observing hero begins to note a great change in Long, whose conversational powers have enormously improved. On making this discovery known to Mrs. Brissenden she agrees that she has never seen a man so improved; and, on being asked by the inquiring hero for the cause of the change, rejoins: 'Well, a very clever woman has for some time past taken a particular interest in him.' Whereupon the hero proceeds to formulate a theory as to the influence exerted by one person over another in cases where two individuals have been brought into intimate personal relationship. So much time and space are devoted to the study and discussion of this theory, and to the observation of various guests at Newmarch with a view to its elucidation and confirmation, that we must reluctantly confess to a feeling of weariness very unusual when reading one of Mr. James's books; and regret that instead of giving his readers in the volume before us two such stories as were contained in 'The Two Magies,' he has preferred to present them with a cleverly written but rather abstruse disquisition.

From Messrs. Morison Brothers (Glasgow).—'Morison's Chronicle of the Year's News of 1900,' compiled by George Eyre-Todd. This most useful work is planned to supply a diary of the vital events and news of the year 1900. By means of the index at the end of the work, a ready reference is furnished to matter not otherwise available except by the laborious and frequently prohibitive process of search through newspaper files. In this way the dates and details of events like the South African battles, the relief of the Pekin Legations, the death of Mr. R. D. Blackmore, and the assassination of King Humbert, are made at once ascertainable; and the main evidence and dicta on such subjects as the War Hospitals question, Municipal Trading, and the Housing of the Working Classes may be brought together. The most important and interesting speeches of the year are epitomised, with verbatim excerpts; and the chief statistics, travels, trials, and scientific discoveries are summarised.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Shifting Scenes; or, Memories of Many Men in Many Lands,' by the Right Hon. Sir Edward Malet, G.C.B. The author of this chatty and entertaining volume has had, in his capacity of diplomatist, a particularly eventful career. War has been the constant companion of his progress, and by a stroke of good luck, which he never thoroughly appreciated until long afterwards, the work at all his posts happened to be difficult and eventful. He was at Parana, the capital of the Argentine Confederation, when General Urquiza made war on the National forces; at Washington during the memorable struggle between North and South; in Constantinople from 1865 to 1867, when his main difficulty was to stave off an outbreak of hostilities. capital he went to Paris and remained to the end of the Franco-German war and the Commune, subsequently being again sent to Constantinople, where, as Minister Plenipotentiary, in the absence of the Ambassador, he had tremendously hard work to induce the Porte to carry out the terms of the Treaty of Berlin. Next he was despatched to Egypt, his mission there ceasing with its occupation, when he was appointed Minister at Brussels. His duties at the various embassies have naturally made him acquainted with many notable people, and in his present work he supplies us with numerous interesting and amusing anecdotes regarding them, with here and there a deeper criticism. He speaks in eulogistic terms of the good qualities of Lord Lyons and his admirable method of managing his staff; relates how General Gordon once wanted to fight a duel; describes the character of Arabi Pasha; pays a warm tribute to Lord Dufferin, and so forth; while interspersed with the lighter passages of the volume are some interesting comments on the public events of the period, as they were more particularly connected with his own work. The book will be found a most charming companion for a leisure evening's amusement, and the humorous fiction the author has introduced of supposing himself interviewed by an all-important reporter named 'Whiffles' imparts a lightness and vivacity to his reminiscences that are distinctly attractive.

From George Newnes, Limited.—The Hockey Annual, 1900-1901, compiled and edited by 'Diana' of the Ladies' Field. Turning over the pages of this useful and interesting little volume, we have been greatly impressed by the energy of the editor. Practically the entire book is her work, for outside contributions are few in number, and then only of the shortest. That the annual in its first issue should be so complete and informative is mainly due to her efforts, and we may especially commend the chapter for beginners, relating to questions of outfit, the game, and some duties of Hon. Secretary and Captain, which is from her pen. The major portion of the book consists of club information.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'The Siege of Kumassi,' by Lady Hodgson. This is a highly interesting, and, in many respects, enlightening book, though we could have wished that the author had confined herself to the simple description of her experiences without adopting such an authoritative air in regard to the movements she depicts, her opinions being manifestly reflected from other minds. But what a story of plucky endurance the book reveals! Certainly when the history of the many gallant defences that have distinguished the past year comes to be written, this will not be forgotten. It may be remembered that negotiations between the British Governor and the rebels abruptly terminated on April 25, and immediately the Ashantis surrounded the capital in overwhelming numbers. From this moment commenced a long protracted struggle, provisions and ammunition steadily diminishing day by day, and discomforts increasing in all directions. Fortunately the blacks did not make a general assault or all might have been over. At length the heroic defenders were reduced to the point of starvation. 'Leaves from the trees, grass, anything that was thought eatable was eagerly sought for and converted into food; all around us people were dying. . . . Most terrible of all was to see those who from starvation had gone mad. The shrieks and yells from some of them were heart-rending; others would quietly sit down, perhaps picking and tearing their clothes to pieces, with a vacant smile upon their faces.' How Sir Frederick Hodgson and his wife eventually escaped and the fort was rescued is graphically set forth in this volume, the value of which is greatly enhanced by a large number of beautiful illustrations, reproduced from photographs.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The Pa Papers; and other things to while away a weary hour.' In some books by English authors there is bad spelling to the use of which no objection can fairly be made because it is found in letters, diaries, or other documents supposed to be written by illiterate persons, and is exactly the kind of spelling the characters employing it would be likely to use. The spelling in some of the letters in Smollett's 'Humphry Clinker,' and throughout Thackeray's 'Yellowplush Memoirs' and 'Jeames's Diary,' are cases in point. But in these there is no lack of plot, characters, incidents, or incisive writing. In the composition of the 'Pa Papers,' however, the principal ingredient is the bad spelling. One would think some English words when correctly spelt sufficiently puzzling, although hardly calculated to make weary hours less wearisome; but we must candidly confess to feeling as weary as Mariano in the moated grange ere we had spent half-an-hour in puzzling out such words as 'iddy O'Sincrasny,' 'ettum mullogickle,' and 'sivle izashun.'

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Trewern: a Tale of the Thirties,' by R. M. Thomas. Mr. Thomas's story leaves a very pleasant impression on the mind. As a work of fiction it may be far from faultless, but it possesses qualities of quiet observation, insight, and humour that amply atone for the deficiencies in construction. To the thoughtful lover of wild nature it will especially appeal. David Evans, the leading character and narrator of the story, is a man born and bred in the country, who knows every inch of the ground round Trewern, and finds more pleasure in studying the haunts and habits of the fur and feathered things frequenting his wide estate than in the society of his fellow beings. To such a man, imbued with an intense love of nature, the 'smell that wet moss gives when you tread on it, or a whiff of the west wind before the sea salt has died out of it,' possesses more attraction than the most beautiful scenery in the world. In the ways of women David Evans is particularly inexperienced. As the delightful Mrs. Hamlyn once says to him, 'You are so big and strong, and so truthful, that some woman some day will fall very much in love with you, but I am afraid that will not be much good to you, for you are sure to make a mess of things, and throw your chances away.' Whether he does this we must leave the reader to find out, but we can promise him much pleasure in the recital of David's love entanglements. If 'Trewern' is a first work, then there is a future in store for the author. Only as a writer of fiction he must learn to show more discrimination in his selection of material.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Emu's Head: a Chronicle of Dead Man's Flat,' by W. Carlton Dawe. The stirring incidents of this story mostly take place at a mining location in Australia, and the method of their narration is becomingly vigorous and brisk. The old stalking horse of hidden treasure is trotted out again to excellent advantage, and the efforts of 'Flash Jim' and 'Snaky Steve' to obtain the explanatory chart of the spot from the handsome young hero are productive of much interest. Three murders are committed in the course of the story, together with other crimes, and there are any number of minor brutalities. Nor is the love element omitted, and in the person of the beautiful, impulsive Kitty Logan readers have one of those variable, many-sided characters which never fail to attract by reason of their intense humanity. Altogether, 'The Emu's Head' may be safely commended to those who like a vigorous sensational story and are not particularly critical in regard to its literary merits.

From Mr. Philip Wellby.—'The Gift of the Spirit: a Selection from the Essays of Prentice Mulford,' with an Introduction by Arthur Edward Waite. Those psychologically inclined will find a rich treasure-house in this volume. Mr. Mulford's essays were originally published separately in Boston, U.S.A., and afterwards, when a sufficient number had appeared, gathered periodically into volumes. Those here given have not been selected solely on account of merit, but because they treat of subjects which are most calculated to attract the readers of transcendental literature in this country. They will be found highly attractive by all who are interested, either as an intellectual study or as a matter of belief, in speculative metaphysical science. The essays themselves can hardly be termed closely reasoned so much as happily suggestive. In his introduction Mr. Waite supplies some interesting particulars in regard to the author's life, and clears the ground, so to speak, for the appreciative reception of Mr. Mulford's teaching. His career seems to have been particularly varied and eventful, and perhaps we may be forgiven for pointing out that his restlessness and apparent want of steady application were scarcely in favour of his possessing a well-balanced judgment.

From Mr. Effingham Wilson.—'Banks and their Customers,' by Henry Warren. 4th edition. This is a new issue of a small work containing a fund of interesting matter relating to banks and their management with special reference to the needs of customers. It is calculated to be of considerable assistance to those who have either banking or deposit accounts. The last chapter on the salaries of bank clerks will surprise many readers.

From Messrs. John Wright & Co., Bristol.—'First Aid to the Injured and Sick: an Ambulance Handbook,' by F. J. Warwick, M.B., and A. C. Tunstall, M.D. This excellent manual is the outcome of an extensive experience on the authors' part of the wants of an ambulance class. It contains within small space a large amount of valuable information in regard to 'First Aid,' and the text is usefully supplemented by a profusion of illustrations, the majority of which are original. The book is one of the clearest and most practical guides on the subject that we are acquainted with, and its size and general 'get-up' are both in its favour.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

The Publishers' Weekly

Established in 1872, with which was incorporated the American Literary Gazette and Publishers' Circular (established in 1852), is recognised as the independent representative of the publishing and bookselling interests in the United States.

The central feature of the paper, that makes it an indispensable aid to the book trade, to libraries, and to literary people, is its Bibliographical Department. Every possible facility of reference is afforded by a combination of methods which records the books by the week, the month, the season, and the year, under the author, the publisher, the title, the subject, and the class.

The Literary Department includes comprehensive intelligence as to books forthcoming and publishing movements at home and abroad, editorial discussions on book and trade subjects, original contributions, notes on catalogues, notes on auction sales, journalistic notes, business notes, literary and trade notes, &c.

A minor, but practical and convenient, feature is the 'Books Wanted' column, giving subscribers an opportunity, under the most favourable circumstances, to search for books which may be out of print or unobtainable through the regular channels.

Subscription price, postage prepaid, $4 a year. Advertising rates on application.

From the same office are published: 'The American Catalogue,' 'The Publishers' Trade List Annual,' 'The American Educational Catalogue,' 'The Annual Literary Index,' The Library Journal, Literary News, and other bibliographical aids. Send for booklet.

The S.P.C.K. Encyclopædic Dictionary

The Cheapest Comprehensive Dictionary in the World, consisting of 5,336 pages, imperial 8vo.

Is the largest Dictionary published—over 200,000 words. It is an easier, simpler, handier Dictionary than any other, and is an Encyclopædia as well.

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES OF THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY:

Its comprehensiveness and its wideness of range in point of time.

'The Encyclopædic Dictionary,' by combining in one all these special Glossaries or Vocabularies, effects a double saving, an economy of time and of money.

Its richness and completeness of the illustrative quotations.

Its thoroughly encyclopædic character.

The large number and practical character of its illustrations.

The numerous pictorial illustrations, although eminently artistic in character, are in no sense mere embellishments, but in every case help to elucidate the text.

BALLADS OF BATTLE

By 'ORIEL' (JOHN SANDES).

PREFACE: In republishing, by the courteous permission of the Proprietors of The Argus, the verses contained in this little volume, I desire at the present brilliant moment in Britain's history to furnish a small memento of the stirring events in South Africa, and of the glorious achievements of those Australian troops who have on many a battlefield cemented with their blood the unity of the Empire.

'TOP-SHELF' AND 'CURIOUS' LITERATURE.

Everybody whose address is in a directory knows that there are certain booksellers and publishers who trade in immoral books, pamphlets, &c., chiefly through the medium of the post-office. Although our authorities appear to be getting more lax every year with respect to the traffic in indecent publications, still, every now and then they wake up and make a raid on 'stocks' of this character existing in this country, and take proceedings against the 'publisher.' So there is still some amount of risk attached to the business, and it is now found safer, as well as cheaper, to work it from some Continental town, whence the dealer in these 'curious' works sends his circulars broadcast through the post. It is not pleasant to know that our Postmaster-general has no power to stop this flood of filth from the Continent; it is doubtful if even the all-detecting X-ray would help him to see the real nature of the innocent-looking missives he delivers in our homes, even if he had time or authority to attempt it. Nothing but power to proceed against the sender would be of any avail against this branch of the traffic, and there is not much hope of Lord Campbell's Act being applied on the Continent.

But there is another branch of the same trade which certainly could be dealt with, which is carried on by means of advertisements inserted in newspapers and other periodicals published in Great Britain and the Colonies; some of these advertisements are printed and published by 'eminently respectable' firms, who are only too well aware of their nature, and charge accordingly. It would be perfectly easy to obtain evidence of the nature of the books, pictures, art studies, &c., advertised in so many of the papers circulating by millions in this country and our colonies, and a few prosecutions would have a very wholesome effect.

An enterprising American contemporary recently gave the following account of trading on what the Americans call 'The spicy ad. line':

A PIOUS SWINDLE.

'The slickest swindlers on record are a firm in Montreal. They advertise that for $1 they will send "securely sealed a beautifully bound book of 400 pages, full of good things; every sport should have one; the most wonderful book ever written; French and English translations prohibited in some countries."

'For his dollar the dupe receives a copy of the Bible, which retails at fifteen cents, and which anyone can plainly see answers all the specifications of the advertisement.

'The slickest move in this scheme was the selection of the Bible, as the authorities to whom complaint has been made refuse to act, on the ground that they will not interfere with a plan which is so well calculated to place the Scriptures in the hands of those very persons who need it the most.'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Owing to the illness of Mr. Thomas Hutchinson, the publication of the new 'Complete Library edition of Charles Lamb' has been postponed, and 'The Complete Works of Cervantes,' under the editorship of Mr. James Fitzmaurice-Kelly, are announced by Messrs. Gowans & Gray in its stead. Vol. IV. of the Complete Works of John Keats has just been published in their admirable series.

Messrs. Macmillan have just brought out new and uniform editions of 'The Solitary Summer,' and 'Elizabeth and her German Garden,' which are likely to arouse fresh discussion about the authorship; for the books are illustrated with photographic pictures of the house, the hall, the park, the village, and, above all, the garden which 'Elizabeth' has made so famous.

There will be issued immediately from the Oxford University Press a new 'School History of England,' the joint work of several teachers of experience, with concise tables, maps, and plans; and also a book by the Rev. H. B. George, Fellow of New College, Oxford, of which the title, 'The Relations of Geography and History,' speaks for itself.

Mr. Henry Norman, M.P., has recently returned from another visit to St. Petersburg, and as a result has written for the March Scribner's an article on the most powerful political man in the Empire, M. de Witte, the Minister of Finance. The new economic and industrial Russia is a creation of this man, and a recent despatch adds: 'His love of peace, his determination to develop Russia's internal resources, and his pronounced American sympathies are sufficient reasons why the world, and especially America, should congratulate Russia.'

The wonderful transformations of the map made during the last century are graphically shown in the March Scribner's by a series of comparative maps, drawn under the direction of Joseph Sohn, to accompany his interesting article on the subject.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a novel by the Earl of Iddesleigh, entitled 'Belinda Fitzwarren.' The story deals with no problem, and its sole object is to amuse and interest.

Another Andrew in the field. Mr. Andrew Lang says in Longman's Magazine for April: 'The other author who bears my Christian name and surname is busy just now. Remonstrances reach me from Scotland and America. Why do I write these examples of prose and verse? If they do not seem to give satisfaction that is not my fault. "It was the other boy." Editors will please accept the announcement that there is, as in Homer's case, "another person of the same name." He cannot wish to be mistaken for me, and might avoid that inconvenience by adding another Christian name; say, de Vere. "A. de Vere Lang:" everybody would know that an author so styled was not myself. Readers cannot distinguish us by style, especially as both have been writing on Prince Charlie.'

'Does anybody know,' says Mr. Lang, 'who wrote the following stanza, apparently in no good place?—

'Oh! that a wee, wee bird would come,

Could it come but ance i' the year,

And bring as muckle moul and yird

As its sma feet could bear.

And drap it in that ugsome hole

That lies 'tween Heaven and me—

Then might I hope Heaven's gates to win;

But, ah! that canna be!'

Professor J. Earle's historical essay on 'The Alfred Jewel' (which has been the object of the author's study for half a century), with numerous illustrations, some coloured, and a map, is on the eve of publication from the Oxford University Press. Another work which Mr. Henry Frowde, publisher to the University, will have ready shortly is 'Legislative Methods and Forms,' by Sir Courtenay Ilbert, Parliamentary Counsel to the Treasury. The contents of the volume represent more than thirty years' experience in the preparation of legislative measures both in England and in India.

* *

Mr. George Allen will publish in May 'The Life of the Bee,' by Maurice Maeterlinck. A chapter from 'The Life of the Bee' is at present appearing in the Fortnightly Review, and the book is considered by those who have read the complete proof to be one of the most fascinating comparisons of the wonderful life and economy of the bee with the lives of men ever written.

* *

Mr. Allen will also publish a new edition in one volume of Francesca Alexander's 'Christ's Folk in the Apennine, Reminiscences of her Friends among the Tuscan Peasantry,' edited by John Ruskin.

* *

Mr. Heinemann has in preparation the English edition of 'The Love-Letters of Prince Bismarck,' in which the man of 'blood and iron' who made the German Empire appears in a strangely unfamiliar but deeply interesting aspect—as the tender husband, the anxious father, the country squire solicitous for the welfare of his dependents, and, above all, as a man of deep religious feeling, amounting at times to an almost superstitious belief in the Divine direction of his small private affairs. The correspondence covers the whole term of Bismarck's betrothal and marriage, continuing in an intermittent series throughout his campaigns and his many diplomatic missions, and his absences as Ambassador in the chief European capitals.

* *

A new edition of George Borrow's 'Lavengro' is about to be added to Messrs. Methuen's 'Little Library.' It has been edited, with an introduction and notes, by Mr. F. H. Groome, who is an expert in Romany lore.

* *

Messrs. Methuen are also about to issue Mr. Charles Gleig's amusing story of the navy entitled 'Bunter's Cruise.' A selection of the illustrations which accompanied the serial publication of the story in the Navy and Army Illustrated will be included in the book.

* *

The April issue of the House (Messrs. H. Virtue & Co.) will contain an illustrated article on Inigo Jones.

* *

Mr. H. B. Irving has based his new work, 'Studies of French Criminals'—to be published by Mr. Heinemann—on the extreme forms of passion, cynicism, refined cruelty, and sheer brutality which the law dignifies by the name of crime, as shown in such criminals as Lacenaire, Troppmann, Prado, and Ravachol. The opportunities that the French criminal procedure offers for the complete exposure of the career and motives of an accused person give a life and animation to the French records of crime very opposite to the ponderous severity of our English reports of such proceedings. Mr. Irving has gone to these authentic sources for his studies, and has endeavoured to select those criminals whose individualities and misdeeds remove them from the category of ordinary malefactors.

The third volume of Huxley's 'Scientific Memoirs,' edited by Sir Michael Foster and Professor Ray Lankester, has just been published by Messrs. Macmillan. It contains thirty-eight papers, mainly palaeozoic studies.

* *

Messrs. Methuen will publish in a few days an elaborate work, entitled 'The English Turf,' by Charles Richardson. This book describes the evolution of racing and of the racehorse of to-day. It deals minutely with the lines of blood, the principal racecourses, trainers, jockeys, steeple-chasing, and in fact with every detail of racing under modern conditions. It is freely illustrated with portraits of famous thoroughbreds, pictures of actual races, and plans of courses.

* *

'The Decadence of Realism' is the title of an interesting article in the March number of the Book Buyer (New York).

* *

We are not surprised to learn that upwards of ninety-seven thousand copies have been sold of Messrs Ward, Lock & Co.'s admirable little 'Guide to London,' of which they have just published an entirely new edition.

* *

'A for our Army that went out to win, 'B for our Buller that wouldn't give in,' And so on, goes the 'Khaki Alphabet,' by L. D. Powles, with vigorous illustrations by Tom Browne, which Mr. Edward Arnold has just published. Will amuse the young warriors of the nursery as well as those of the barrack-room.

* *

Mr. William Heinemann will shortly publish a plea for Italian cookery—which is practically unknown in this country. Mrs. W. G. Waters, in 'The Cook's Decameron,' sets forth the philosophy of the culinary art. This is divided, like its great prototype, into the story of ten days, to which are added complete menus for those days, besides two hundred 'recipes,' which have been chosen with extreme care so as to include all those ingredients which can be procured in England. Italian cookery is shown to be varied in scope, and clever devices are detailed to help English housekeepers of moderate means to fare better and spend less.

* *

'The China Crisis, its Causes and its Solution,' is the title of a most important paper by Mr. Joseph Walton, M.P., which was read before the Society of Arts on February 19, and has since been published in pamphlet form by Mr. Wm. Trousance, of 10 Gough Square.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a new novel by Miss Dorothea Gerard, entitled 'The Supreme Crime.' It is a tragic story of Austrian Poland.

Dr. Archibald Stodart Walker, the author of 'The Struggle for Success,' will publish on March 26, through Mr. Grant Richards, a work entitled 'Robert Buchanan: the Poet of Modern Revolt.' In this book Dr. Stodart Walker presents a complete panoramic view of Mr. Robert Buchanan's poetical works, and indicates, in summarising the whole, the significance of the poet in the general economy of modern thought.

* *

Messrs. Pearson are to-day publishing 'A Varsity Man,' being the love experiences of an impressionable Oxford undergrad, by Inglis Allen; and Mr. Frank Bullen's latest work, 'A Sack of Shakings.'

* *

A work on 'Disease in Plants,' by H. Marshall Ward, Professor of Botany at Cambridge, will be published by Messrs. Macmillan. It aims at giving to all cultivators of plants some clear sketch of the symptoms of various plant-maladies, and of the course of each disease, with a general indication of the causes.

* *

Captain Alfred Hutton, F.S.A., has written a book, which Mr. Grant Richards will publish shortly, entitled 'The Sword and the Centuries; or, Old Sword Days and Old Sword Ways.' It has a further subtitle: 'A description of the various swords used in civilised Europe during the last five centuries, and of single combats which have been fought with them.' It will be illustrated.

* *

'Pictures of the Year 1901,' the popular handbook to the picture galleries of the season, will be published this year as an 'Extra' of the Pall Mall Magazine. It will be brought up to modern standards of artistic taste and requirements, its illustrations will be improved, and it will include other special features of which details will be published later on.

* *

Messrs. Methuen are publishing this week the sixth volume of their 'History of Egypt.' It contains 'Egypt in the Middle Ages,' and is written by Professor Stanley Lane-Poole.

* *

Mr. J. A. Hobson's 'Psychology of Jingoism' is to be published on March 26 by Mr. Grant Richards. It is divided into three parts—'Jingoism, its Meaning and Origin,' 'Its Diagnosis,' and 'Its Manufacture.'

* *

Mr. James Murray, bookseller, Aberdeen, has been appointed an hon. sheriff-substitute in the Aberdeen Sheriff Court. Mr. Murray has for many years acted as a justice of the peace, and has been most assiduous in the discharge of his duties. His experience on the bench admirably qualifies Mr. Murray for the work of an hon. sheriff-substitute.

Mr. Benjamin Swift has, for the moment at least, departed from the path of the novelist, and has, under his own name, W. R. Paterson, completed a volume entitled 'The Eternal Conflict.' This is a rapid and concentrated survey of the state of modern knowledge with special reference to human conduct.

* *

'The Heritage of Unrest,' by Gwendolen Overton (a novel just published by the Macmillan Company), gives a very picturesque though gloomy account of military life on the Indian frontier of America.

* *

'The Secret Orchard,' which has just been produced in Newcastle by Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, is based upon Mr. Egerton Castle's new novel with the same title now running as a serial in the Temple Bar Magazine.

* *

No. 1 of the Temperance Critic has reached us. It calls itself 'a sane temperance [not teetotal] paper,' and adds that it is 'an organ of constructive reform.' It is to appear at 2d. on the 15th of each month, and we wish it success as long as it keeps to its moderate programme. Some of the 'temperance' papers are far more intemperate than any victim of drink can be.

* *

Mr. Elliot Stock will publish the following volumes of verse very shortly: 'Silver Linings to the Clouds of Life,' by W. Alfred Gibbs, and 'In the Land of Make-believe,' by Mrs. Paine; also, 'The Romance of the Boer War,' by MacCarthy O'Moore.

* *

Messrs. Methuen will issue in a day or two 'The Real Chinese Question,' by Mr. Chester Holcombe, who treats his subject with absolute frankness, endeavouring to describe the Chinese as they are, with all their faults and all their virtues.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

The Nieuwsblad voor den Boekhandel states that Heer J. Donker, who is engaged in making new designs to illustrate the 'Gedichten van den Schoolmeester' ('The Schoolmaster's Poems'), is the illustrator as well as the author of the 'Avonturen van Dr. Mol' ('The Adventures of Dr. Mol').

A new work by Marie Marx-Koning, entitled 'Het Beeld op de Rotz' ('The Statue on the Rock'), with lithographic illustrations by the painter Moulijn, will be published by C. A. J. van Dishoeck, Amsterdam, in the spring.

It appears that the romance 'Claartje,' the title-page of which bears the name of F. van Goudoever as its author, is written by Mevrouw Anderson.

Amongst the contents of the 'Jaarboekje van Alberdingk Thijm' ('The People's Almanack for Dutch Catholics') are a contribution by J. J. F. van Zeyl on 'Jacobus à Voragine and his Golden Legend'; an important article by J. Allard on 'Hendrick Laurens Spiegel'; and bibliographical annotations on the L. Marius's book 'Amstelredam's eer ende opcomen,' by J. F. M. Sterck.

'Sonnenfunken' is the title of a new volume of short stories by Nataly von Eschstruth, which Paul List, Leipzig, will publish immediately.

Amongst the new publications of Librairie Plon we note 'Cent Jours du Siège à la Préfecture de Police,' by A. Cresson. This episode in the Franco-German War of 1870-71 includes the period from November 2, 1870, to February 11, 1871, and does not simply contain the recollections of a single private person, but is written by the then prefect of police, who was so situated as to know all the misery of those days of trial, and has written a true and unbiassed narrative of historical value. 'L'Europe et la Question d'Autriche au seuil du XX^e Siècle,' by André Chéradame; an important work in which the probability of the partition of the Austro-Hungarian Empire after the death of the Emperor Francis Joseph is seriously considered.

'La Jeunesse de Balzac, 1825-1828,' by Gabriel Hanotaux and Georges Vicaire, with an unpublished portrait, is announced for publication in November next by A. Ferroud, who promises to give details of the work shortly. It will include the period of the great writer's career when he carried on business as a printer and type-founder.

'Cinq Ans de ma Vie, 1894-1899,' by Captain Alfred Dreyfus, giving a moving recital of the life of agony, hopes, disappointments, and moral and physical sufferings of that condemned officer during and after his trial in 1894, on the Île du Diable and until the trial at Rennes, is announced by Eugène Fasquelle to be published immediately.

DINNER OF THE PUBLISHERS' AND BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATIONS.

The above associations have united for the purpose of holding a trade dinner, which will take place at the Hotel Cecil, on Friday, May 10, at 6.30 for 7 o'clock.

The chair will be taken on this occasion by Mr. Frederick Macmillan, President of the Publishers' Association, and the vice-chair will be occupied by Mr. Henry W. Keay, President of the Associated Booksellers.

As this is essentially a dinner of publishers and booksellers, it has been thought advisable not to send official invitations to anyone unconnected with the trade, but gentlemen will be at liberty to bring friends as private guests.

The following are the Executive Committee: Frederick Macmillan, President of the Publishers' Association, Henry W. Keay, President of the Associated Booksellers, Joseph W. Darton, Frank Denny, Frank Hanson, Joseph Shaylor.

Communications respecting the dinner should be sent to the Secretary, Mr. Wm. Poulten, Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.

Dinner tickets will be 7s. 6d. each.

CRITICISM AND INTOLERANCE.

Literary critics have been provided with food for reflection by Mr. Churton Collins, who brings railing accusations against them because they are too gentle in reviewing the work of 'the average man.' There is no doubt that they scatter praise more freely than did the early 'Edinburgh' reviewers, and they would not be human if they did not sometimes praise the wrong things for the wrong reasons; but it is a little hard to see why the 'average man,' if he writes a book, should necessarily be regarded as an object of aversion and contempt. One does not set up, in the case of the other products of human labour, those fantastically high standards that the superior critics want to set up in the case of books. One can be enthusiastic about a good dinner even though one knows of a chef in Paris who can cook a better one. Why should it be otherwise with books? If they give pleasure to the reviewer, and seem calculated to give pleasure to his readers, why should he not say so, without harping invidiously on their inferiority to the masterpieces? The masterpieces of literature are not so numerous that we can afford to ignore all other sources of literary enjoyment.—Daily Graphic.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 6.—ALICE GUY.

The subject of this sketch does not properly belong to that of 'Booksellers of Other Days,' but it has somewhat to do with an old bookseller's wife. It will be remembered that Alice Guy was the young person who 'opened the door' to Thomas Gent and subsequently became his spouse; it will also be remembered that she was the daughter of Richard Guy, a schoolmaster of Ingleton in Yorkshire, and it is on his account mainly that I have written this sketch. Since writing about Thomas Gent, I have been looking through 'The Doctor,' by Robert Southey, and I find that therein he has given a sketch of Gent taken from the same volume as that from which my story sprang: he has told the same story in another and of course a better way, but he connects Richard Guy not only with Gent, who printed for him the old poem of 'Flodden Field,' but also with 'The Doctor' himself, and the account of this connection is so curious and amusing that I have been unable to resist the temptation of endeavouring to tell a consecutive story out of material which really runs through nearly 200 pages of 'The Doctor.' Of course everybody knows that 'The Doctor' occupies seven octavo volumes, compressed subsequently into one, a volume of about 700 pages of closely printed double column matter and treats de omnibus rebus et quibusdam aliis, but I have limited myself to 'The Doctor' and the schoolmaster.

In order to come to a proper understanding it is necessary to begin our sketch at the beginning. Who was 'The Doctor'? 'The Doctor' was Doctor Daniel Dove—Daniel, the son of Daniel Dove and of Dinah his wife, was born near Ingleton, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, on the 22nd of April, old style, 1723, nine minutes and three seconds after three in the afternoon. Daniel, the father, was one of a race of men who unhappily are now almost extinct. He was commonly called 'Flossofer' Daniel by his neighbours. He lived on an estate of six-and-twenty acres which his fathers possessed before him, all Doves and Daniels in uninterrupted succession from time immemorial, farther than registers or title-deeds could ascend. Their dwelling was a bowshot to the east of the church called Chapel-le-Dale, and the intervening fields belonged to the family. Happily for Daniel, he lived before the age of magazines, reviews, cyclopædias, and literary newspapers. His books were few in number but they were all weighty in matter or in size. He had looked into all these books, had read most of them, and believed all he read, except 'Rabelais,' which he could not tell what to make of. Having nothing to desire for himself, Daniel's ambition had taken a natural direction, and was fixed upon his son. He resolved that his son should be made a scholar.

Richard Guy, in the decline of life, came to settle at Ingleton, in the humble capacity of schoolmaster. He was the person to whom the lovers of Old Rhyme are indebted for the preservation of the old poem of 'Flodden Field,' which he transcribed from an old manuscript, and which was printed from his transcript by Thomas Gent, of York. In his way through the world, which had not been along the king's high Dunstable road, he had picked up a competent share of Latin, and a little Greek, some theoretical and practical knowledge of physic, of astrology enough to cast a nativity, and he had some acquaintance with alchemy. Five and fifty years of life had taught him none of the world's wisdom, but he had a wise heart worth all other wisdom. As a schoolmaster he never consumed birch enough to have made a besom. Young Daniel was committed to his tuition when he was approaching his seventh year.

Daniel, and his son and Richard Guy, were walking together one day when young Daniel, looking up in his father's face, proposed this question: 'Will it be any harm, father, if I steal five beans when next I go into John Dowthwaite's, if I can do it without anyone seeing me?'

'And what wouldst thou steal beans for,' was the reply, 'when anybody would give them to thee, and when thou knowest there are plenty at home?'

'But it won't do to have them given, father,' replied the boy, 'they are to charm away my warts.' Uncle William says I must steal five beans, a bean for every wart, and tie them carefully up in paper, and carry them to a place where two roads cross, and then drop them, and then walk away without ever once looking behind me, and then the warts will go away from me, and come upon the hands of the person that picks up the beans.'

'My boy,' the father made answer, 'if thy warts are a trouble to thee, they would be a trouble to anyone else. . . . Have nothing to do with charms like that!'

'May I steal a piece of raw beef, then,' said the boy, 'and rub the warts with it and bury it? For uncle says that will do, and as the beef rots the warts will die away.'

'Daniel,' said the father, 'there can be no lawful charms that begin with stealing. I could tell thee how to cure thy warts in a better manner; there is an infallible way, which is by washing thy hands in moonshine, but then the moonshine must be caught in a bright silver basin. You wash, and wash in the basin, and a cold moisture will be felt upon the hands, proceeding from the cold rays of the moon.'

'But what shall we do for a silver basin?'

said little Daniel. The father answered: 'A pewter dish may be tried if it were made very bright, but it is not deep enough; the brass kettle may do better.'

'Nay!' said Richard Guy, who had now begun to attend with some interest, 'the shape of the kettle is not suitable.' So they borrowed John Wilson the barber's brass basin, 'for,' said Guy, 'nobody comes to be shaved by moonlight. If you come in this evening at six o'clock, I will have the basin as bright and shining as a good scouring can make it.' 'The experiment is curious, and I shall like to see it tried. Where, Daniel, didst thou learn it?'

'I read it,' replied Daniel, 'in "Sir Kenelm Digby's Discourses," and he says it never fails.'

Accordingly the parties met at the appointed time. Schoolmaster, father, and son retired to a place of observation by the side of the river. On a stone sate Daniel the elder, holding the basin in such an inclination towards the moon that there should be no shadow in it. Guy directed the boy where to place himself, and stood looking complacently on while young Daniel revolved his hands one within the other as if washing them. 'I feel them cold and clammy, father,' said the boy. 'Ay,' replied the father, 'that's the cold moisture of the moon!' 'Ay,' echoed the schoolmaster, and nodded his head in confirmation. The experiment was repeated on the two following nights. In spite of the patient's belief that the warts would waste away no alteration could be perceived in them at a fortnight's end.

Daniel was of opinion that the experiment had failed because it had not been repeated sufficiently often or continued long enough. The schoolmaster was of opinion that the cause was in the basin, for that silver, being the lunar metal, would by affinity assist the influential virtues of the moonlight, which, finding no such affinity in a mixed metal of baser compounds, might contrariwise have its potential qualities weakened or even destroyed when received in a brazen vessel and reflected from it. 'Flossofer' Daniel assented to this theory. Nevertheless the child got rid of his excrescences in the course of three or four months, then all parties agreed that the experiment had been effectual, and Sir Kenelm Digby, had he been living, might have procured the solemn attestation of men more veracious than himself that moonshine was an infallible cure for warts.

From this time the two 'Flossifers' were friends. Daniel seldom went to Ingleton without looking in upon Guy, and Guy on his part would walk as far with him on his way back as the tether of his own time allowed.

Young Daniel was from his childhood fond of books; his uncle William used to say he was a chip of the old block, and this hereditary disposition was regarded with much satisfaction by both parents, whilst Guy observed his progress with as much delight as Daniel himself; he had from the first conceived a liking for the boy, both because of the right principle which was evinced by the manner in which he proposed the question concerning stealing the beans, and and of the profound gravity with which he behaved in the affair of the moonshine. The boy had indeed a kind master, as well as a happy home, and was never subject to brutal treatment, nor was any of that inhuman injustice ever exercised upon him to break his spirit 'for which,' says our author, 'it is to be hoped Dean Colet has paid in purgatory; to be hoped, I say, because if there be no purgatory the Dean may have gone farther and fared worse.'

The intellectual education which Daniel received at home was as much out of the ordinary course as the books in which he studied at school. 'Robinson Crusoe' had not yet reached Ingleton; the only book within his reach was 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' and this he read at first without a suspicion of its allegorical import.

'Oh! what blockheads,' exclaims our author, 'are those wise persons who think it necessary that a child should comprehend everything it reads!'

'What, sir,' exclaims a lady, who is bluer than ever one of her naked and woad-stained ancestors appeared at a public festival in full dye. 'What, sir, do you tell us that children are not to be made to understand what they are taught? Are we to make our children learn things by rote like parrots?' 'Yes, madam, in very many cases.'

'I should like, sir, to be instructed why?'

'What I say is, do not feed them with meat till they have teeth to masticate it. There is a great deal which they ought to learn, and must learn, before they can or ought to understand it. Let me tell you a story which the Jesuit Manuel de Vergara used to tell of himself. When he was a little boy he asked a Dominican friar what was the meaning of the seventh commandment, for he said he could not tell what committing adultery was. The friar, not knowing how to answer, cast a perplexed look round the room, and, thinking he had found a safe reply, pointed to a kettle on the fire, and said the commandment meant that he must never put his hand in the pot while it was boiling. The very next day a loud scream alarmed the family, and, behold, there was little Manuel running about the room, holding up his scalded finger and exclaiming, "Oh, dear, oh, dear, I've committed adultery! I've committed adultery! I've committed adultery!"'

'That,' said the author, 'though I say it who shouldn't, is a good story well applied.'

I had no thought of introducing Daniel Dove and young Daniel his son, excepting so far as the boy's boyhood had some connection with Alice Guy's father, Richard Guy, the schoolmaster; so I will start young Daniel on his great career, by stating that it was in the year of our Lord 1739, having then entered upon his seventeenth year, accompanied by his father, he first entered Doncaster, and was there delivered up by that excellent man to the care of Peter Hopkins. Father and son loved each other so dearly that this, which was the first day of their separation, was to both the unhappiest of their lives.

There I, too, must part with Daniel, and leave him to study medicine with Dr. Hopkins, and so become, as he afterwards did, and as everybody knows, 'The Doctor' of world-wide fame. As says the author, 'My Dove, my Daniel, my Doctor Daniel Dove—everybody's Doctor—yea, the World's Doctor, the World's Doctor Daniel Dove!'

Richard Guy did not live to see the progress of his pupil, he died a few months after the lad had been placed at Doncaster, and the delight of Daniel's first return to his home was overclouded by this loss. It was a severe one too for the elder Daniel, who lost in the school-master 'his only intellectual companion.' The person whom the 'Doctor' employed in collecting certain books for him, and whom Peter Hopkins also employed in the same way, was Thomas Gent, the son-in-law of the school-master, for whom, as aforesaid, he printed 'Flodden Field.'

DEATH OF MR. CHARLES BUCKLAND.

We much regret to hear that Mr. Charles Buckland, a partner in the firm of Henry Sotheran & Co., 37 Piccadilly, died on the 16th inst., of pneumonia following influenza.

Mr. Buckland was widely known and esteemed, and we hope to be able to give his portrait and some notes about him next week. He was 69 years of age.

HOW TO ENSURE A LIVING AS BOOKSELLER AND STATIONER.

The Börsenblatt quotes the following account of a very original plan for ensuring an income: 'The stationer who started business at Berlin as a Supply Association just before Christmas is a very sly fellow. The circular giving information on this new kind of trade intercourse runs as follows: "New Plan of Supply; Buying and Selling. The undersigned establishment intends to sell all articles in which it deals at cost price. But, as I (sic) cannot live without income, every buyer must pay a subscription of one mark yearly. On presentation of the receipt for the subscription the paying member shall receive for himself and the members of his family, during the year 1901, all articles sold by me at cost price; even the smallest quantity will be supplied. Whoever wishes to become a member must pay one mark to the undersigned, who will give him a receipt for it. The business will only come into operation if sufficient members shall have paid their subscriptions by Jan. 1, 1901, for me to make a living out of it, otherwise the amount will be at once returned for the receipt. Whoever pays his subscription at once shall receive from that day forth until the end of this year all goods, if not at cost price, at any rate at advantageous prices. The Christmas purchases alone will more than compensate for the one-mark subscription. Postage stamps will be sold to members without any additional charge. Should my undertaking succeed, I will deal in many more articles. My twenty years of independent standing is a guarantee for the genuineness of my business. Respectfully (signed) Louis Köhler, Berlin, N., Brunnenstrasse 77. Stationery, account books, fancy goods, leather goods, dolls and toys, paper collars, school and miscellaneous books.'

COPYRIGHT IN CANADA.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—I have received a letter from a distinguished Canadian lawyer, and have taken the liberty of forwarding you a copy of the same herewith. I did not see the article myself, otherwise I would have written to you on the matter. I trust you will excuse the liberty I am taking. I must apologise for it, merely stating as excuse that it is due to the interest I take in the Canadian copyright question. I send you the gentleman's name in confidence.

Yours truly,

March 18, 1901. G. HERBERT THRING.

[We are much obliged to Mr. Thring for sending us the correction from his Canadian correspondent. Here is a copy of it.—Ed. PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.]

'G. Herbert Thring, Esq.,
'Secretary, The Society of Authors,
'4 Portugal Street,
'Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C.

'DEAR SIR,—In the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of February 23, on page 190, the following little paragraph appears:—

'COPYRIGHT IN CANADA.

'A special despatch to the New York Evening Post, dated Montreal, January 23, says:—"The Divisional Court at Toronto has given judgment holding that no English copyright applies to Canada without specific registration of the article in this country."

'This is, of course, quite misleading. The despatch was sent from someone here in Toronto who did not understand the question involved or the decision. The sender was evidently of the impression that the Canadian Act of 1889 is a part of our Statute Law. Under that statute the British author is granted copyright on condition that his work is before publication or production elsewhere, or simultaneously therewith, registered in the office of the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa. That Act never went into force, never having been proclaimed under the 7th section, which provided that the Act should go into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Governor-General.

'The decision was not one of a Divisional Court, but a decision of Mr. Justice Robinson, who held that the assignee of a British copyright could not bring an action in Canada until the assignment had been registered at Stationers' Hall. It might be advisable to correct the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR in this respect.

'Yours truly,

'March 5, 1901.'

ON SALE OR RETURN.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—You invite opinions whether or no it would pay a publisher to send his books to the booksellers 'on sale or return'; undoubtedly, in many cases, 'yes.'

Let me give my experience. I have sent me on sale or return new French novels as published; the 'returns' to the senders are not 10 per cent. If I had to order and purchase 'outright,' the fear of bad stock would induce me not to stock many that I now have and sell.

I run a circulating library in connection with the business, and the chief demand in it is 'fiction,' so that I have no hesitation in stocking novels, because what I do not sell I can put in the library; more solid books, either of ephemeral or of lasting interest, I hesitate at stocking because I have no outlet for the 'unsolds,' and, here is the point, I often lose sales where, if I were able to show the books, I might make sales.

Allow me to sign myself,

Yours obediently,

KING'S ROAD.

ON SALE OR RETURN. CLOTH OR PAPER COVERS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Without pretending to answer the precise question raised, may I, as bearing somewhat upon it, call attention to the practice among French publishers of issuing school books in boards (cartonné) with a cloth back. This seems to me a middle course which might with advantage be more generally adopted here for other than school books, being, I presume, less expensive than binding them entirely in cloth, and yet strong enough for ordinary purposes, if the book is worth putting into anything better than paper covers.

I leave to others more competent than myself the task of discussing the main question.

Yours faithfully,

Librairie Française:

E. LATHAM.

NO MICROCOCKS ON MR. LANG'S BOOKS.

Writing 'At the Sign of the Ship' in Longman's Magazine for April, Mr. Andrew Lang has the following note:—

'Wretched men that authors are, the public has found out a new and scientific reason for not reading our books. If borrowed from a library they disseminate infection. At Bordeaux, as we read in the Publishers' Circular, a public library was rearranged. This "disturbed immense accumulations of dust," but that was the fault of the learned of Bordeaux. Had they read the books the dust would not have gathered till the dustman himself fell from his cart in a syncope, and was eaten up of bookworms. Like Herod, "he became Skolékobrote and died in the enjoyment of that office." The Publishers' Circular does not give these details: they are not advanced as historical. There were lots of micrococci in the dust, which were reviewed by eminent micrococcologists. Microbes are found to the rate of 2,400 to the square centimetre on well-thumbed books like Miss Marie Corelli's and Mr. Kipling's. The moral is, try unpopular authors. My own works are free from moral taint and microbes, not being well-thumbed. It is the public that contributes the thumbs, and the micrococks, and other fearful wild-fowl. Moreover, the public has the remedy in its own hands. Buy our books; do not ask for them at the circulating library, where the odds are that you will not get them. Then you will be free from the vibrios of the vulgar and the micrococci of the multitude. Books are safer than beer, at all events, or oysters. The latest excuse for only reading Spicy Bits is distinctly too emaciated. The Circular also informs me—

Tell me not what too well I know, as Lauder says—that there is over-production of six-shilling novels. This problem might be solved by the simple plan of not producing them. Ninety-five in a hundred are wanted by nobody but the author. His relations cannot put him under restraint, but the publisher can thwart him.'

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

The Annual General Meeting of the members of the Booksellers' Provident Institution was held at the Sunday School Union, 56 Old Bailey, on Thursday, the 14th inst., Charles James Longman, Esq., the President, occupying the chair. The report of the directors and the balance sheet were presented and unanimously adopted.

The Chairman in the course of his remarks referred to the death of the Queen, their late Patron, and to the resolution on this subject passed at a recent meeting of the Board. He considered the work of the Institution had been carried on in a very satisfactory manner, but regretted the falling off in subscriptions. It was resolved that Her Majesty Queen Alexandra be asked to become the Patron of the Institution, and, the usual election of officers having taken place, the proceedings were closed by a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE PARIS BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

The twenty-seventh annual ball in aid of the funds of the Paris Booksellers' Assistants Provident Society will take place on March 30 at ten o'clock in the salons of the Hôtel Continental, Paris. By permission of the Military Governor-General of Paris, officers of the reserve are authorised to assist in uniform at this fête. The two orchestras will be under the direction of M. J. Mélé.

M. GASTON DESCHAMPS

ON CONTEMPORARY FRENCH DRAMA.

M. Gaston Deschamps, in the latest of his causeries, headed 'La Vie Littéraire,' published in Le Temps and written on board the French mail steamer 'Aquitaine,' bound for New York, thus refers to the course of lectures he has been specially engaged to deliver at Harvard College: 'It is my intention to set forth at Harvard the history of the contemporary French stage. Not that I propose revealing to my auditors in America the very latest fashions of our most lively vaudevillistes. Indeed, it seems to me that foreigners show a rather too marked tendency to judge us from the productions offered by the "boulevard" to frisky travellers. Besides, it is not true that French society is afflicted by all the vices and all the ridiculous persons and things so obligingly attributed to it on the stage. I am about to plead the cause of my country against charges which are too impassioned and parodies which are too absurd. I wish, too, to show how much there is that is noble and lofty in some drama consecrated to disinterested love, in some comedy written to show the punishment of iniquity and pride, in some piece offered as an object of meditation to those haunted by social inquietude.'

THE NEW INDEX OF PROHIBITED BOOKS.

In the preface (says the Neue Freie Presse of Vienna) to the new edition of the 'List of Prohibited Books,' recently published by the Roman Congregation of the Index, it is stated that the list of 'proscribed' books is adapted to present-day use. All those books are omitted which, according to the general decrees of the Popes, are without further ceremony (ohne weiteres) forbidden as well as all books which were prohibited prior to the year 1600. For instance, all books written by heretics which principally or incidentally treat of religion and religious subjects are prohibited without further ceremony. This obviously affects the greatest part of non-Catholic literature. With regard to the rest the main purpose has been to keep an eye upon those books which had been in any respect indicated as being dangerous. Notwithstanding the fact that inquiries into the dangerous influence a book may exercise on faith and morals are as restricted as possible, the newly-published list of the Papal Index contains 278 royal quarto pages. So we may easily imagine how enormously large must be the complete list of all the prohibited books, including those proscribed without further ceremony and those forbidden by name. Amongst other books standing in the old Index are the Psalms of King David, Ovid's 'Art of Love,' and Dante's 'Divine Comedy.' Balzac, Darwin, Descartes, Hume, Mantegazza, Renan, Savonarola, Spinoza, Swedenborg, and Voltaire are also prohibited. Boccaccio's 'Decamerone,' Béranger's 'Chansons' and Mickiewicz are there too. George Sand, Victor Hugo, and Alexander Dumas, père et fils, are also among those condemned. Recent times are also represented by all the Old Catholic writers, such as Dollinger, Friedrich, Reinkens, and Schulte. The philosophical works of the secular-priest Anton Günther, who resided in Vienna from 1820 until his death in 1863, were placed in the Index by a decree of January 8, 1857. 'Devotional Discourses for Academicians' by the Prague Professor of Philosophy Bernhard Bolzano, a contemporary of Günther, and, like him, a Catholic priest, was inhibited by Papal decree of March 4, 1828. Amongst other 'heretics' we may mention Frohschammer, Hermes, Hinschius, and the Würzburg Professor Schell, That David Friedrich Strauss is not unobjectionable is self-understood, although, according to general rule, he must be considered as condemned without further ceremony. Amongst the philosophers Kant takes the first place with his 'Critic of Pure Reason.' Gotthold Ephraim Lessing follows, and Schwegler comes last with his 'History of Philosophy in Outline.' Amongst the proscribed German historians may be mentioned Gregorovius and Ranke. Of the works of Gregorovius not only is the 'History of the City of Rome in the Middle Ages' placed on the Index, but also the work on the 'Tombs of the Popes,' the fifth volume of 'Years of Travel in Italy,' and 'Apulian Landscapes.' Ranke is prohibited because of his 'History of the Popes.' Frederick the Great is of the number of the proscribed, as seems not unnatural. Blumauer, Heine, Lenau, Rau, and Zschokke are amongst the prohibited poets. All Heine's works are on the Index, and Nicolas Lenau's 'The Albigenses' (prohibited by decree Dec. 30, 1845).

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'Memories of the Months,' first series, by the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., F.R.S., second edition. The author says in his preface that there are 'people who enjoy command of their own time, who complain of the dullness of life in the country.' On the other hand, it may with equal truth be said there are many who have no such command of their time who find even greater 'dullness of life' in counting-house or warehouse or factory, in cities unwillingly pent, and who have an earnest longing for country scenes and country sounds; thus it is that 'when at Rome we love Tibur—and at Tibur we love Rome.' Townpent people of this sort have a feeling akin to envy of such men as Sir Herbert Maxwell, who gathers country knowledge by happy experience, and who can so vividly describe all that Nature is doing among trees and flowers, insects and birds, fishes, quadru-

ped, and reptiles throughout the changeable months and seasons of the year; all these things and more will be found in this delightful volume. One can merely indicate the comprehensiveness of its contents by stating that the volume is divided into twelve chapters corresponding with the twelve months of the year, beginning with January and ending with December. Within these chapters ninety-one subjects are lovingly discussed. It is only possible to indicate the character of these subjects by quoting at random a dozen titles, such as 'Bird Migration,' 'Spring Salmon' (in which the question of food or no food during their freshwater ascent is once more discussed), 'Winter Flowers,' 'The Bottletit,' 'Ravening Rooks,' 'Wreck among Rooks,' 'Adders,' 'Summer Birds,' 'Subaqueous Life,' 'Bees and Donkeys,' 'A Hampshire Trout Stream,' 'Why not a Fur Farm?' &c. The chapters on rooks are very interesting. 'What to do with our rooks,' he says, 'is a difficult question. In Scotland they are multiplying beyond all due limits, and on the whole, although they are credited with doing some good, the mischief they do quite outweighs their good qualities.' They don't shoot young rooks in Scotland, ergo they have never tasted rook pie, which alone extenuates the charge of cruelty in shooting them which our author hints at. In that treeless land it seems to be a matter of speculation where the rooks get sticks from to build their nests, but rooks are as inventive as they are ingenious. Those were clever rooks who built their nest round the weathercock of Newcastle Exchange—for several years—and so sailed round and round with the wind—one side being built much thicker and stronger than the other, and this side, of course, was always the windward side. An envious colony of rooks once dislodged them and tore the nest to pieces; but they returned next year, and continued for several years to occupy their curiously chosen abode. The author places a beautiful golden eagle as a frontispiece to his book, but he produces evidence to prove that the monarchy among birds belongs no longer to the golden eagle, but to Corvus Corax, the widely ranging raven of the northern hemisphere. The rook is akin to the crow and the raven, and so may claim to rank high in the aristocracy of birds. In the chapter entitled 'Wreck among Rooks' the author describes the terrible misfortunes that befell the rooks of the Midlands during the violent gale of March 24, 1895, when hundreds of nests were blown to atoms and thousands of rooks perished. One must resist the temptation to quote, and conclude with the remark that this is a most fascinating book, and should be read not only by those who, living in the country, find country life dull, but by those who live dull lives in cities, and who can thus revel in country life by proxy.

From Messrs. G. W. Bacon & Co.—'The New Art Geometry; or, Geometrical Drawing applied to Design,' by F. Steeley and B. H. Trotman. ('Bacon's Excelsior Drawing Publications.') Geometry occupies a more practical position in regard to ornament and design than most people suppose, and the authors of this unpretentious little manual have set themselves to the work of supplying a series of examples that shall be useful to those engaged in the teaching of this important subject. In this direction we are sure the book will be found exceedingly helpful.

From Messrs. A. & C. Black.—'Scottish Cathedrals and Abbeys,' by Rev. D. Butler, M.A., with Introduction by Rev. R. H. Story, D.D., LL.D. This forms one of the scholarly and handsomely got-up series called 'The Guild Library' produced under the able editorship of Revs. Prof. Charteris and J. A. McClymont. The author tells us in his preface that when preparing this volume he wrote an account of every pre-Reformation structure in Scotland of which any remains survive, but the limits of the series necessitated selection. Nevertheless, all the Scottish cathedrals with representative collegiate and monastic buildings are ably and appreciatively described, and reference is made to parish churches representing Norman, Scottish transition, Scottish first pointed, middle pointed, and third pointed styles of architecture. The task of preparing a volume on the more notable of the ancient Scottish churches had been entrusted by the Committee of the Guild to Principal Story, but other engagements prevented his undertaking it, and he recommended that the work should be transferred to Mr. Butler, in whose ability he felt confidence, and this confidence has been justified by this book. Mr. Butler has fulfilled the commission laid upon him with conspicuous ability; and, as Principal Story testifies, 'his treatment of the subject is most instructive, thorough, and exact.' Although this work deals mainly with church architecture and history, there is very much information of general interest scattered throughout its well-written pages, and it should prove a pleasant companion on a tour through North Britain.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Tutorial Press).—'Æschylus: Eumenides,' edited by T. R. Mills, M.A. This little book, one of the well-known 'University Tutorial' series, has been capitally prepared in accordance with the requirements of examination candidates, and in the matter of introduction and notes could scarcely be improved upon. The text of the play is printed in large clear type, and in his preface Mr. Mills gives some account of the argument of the piece. It will be remembered that it forms the third of a trilogy, the two others being the 'Agamemnon' and the 'Choëphoræ.'

From Librairie Armand Colin, Paris.—'Essai d'une Psychologie Politique du Peuple Anglais au XIX^e Siècle,' par Émile Boutmy, Membre de l'Institut. A former work by M. Boutmy on the 'Development of the Constitution and Political Society in England' evidenced how profoundly he had studied our institutions, and plainly showed his fitness for the task he has set himself in the present work, which he modestly terms an 'Essay towards a Political Psychology of the English People in the 19th Century.' The work is divided into four parts. The first part deals with man in general; shows how much influence natural forces have in forming a people; describes the characteristics of climate, coast-line, soil, &c., which differentiate Great Britain from most other countries of the North; and points out that these external influences have formed a school of initiative, activity, foresight, and self-control for the English nation. The author describes the sporting man, the business man, and tells in what various ways Englishwomen devote themselves to useful and charitable works. 'Activity,' he says, 'is more thorough and sustained in England than anywhere else.' He quotes from Tennyson's 'Ulysses' as illustrative of this opinion the following lines:

'How dull it is to pause, to make an end;
To rust, unburnished, not to shine in use!
As tho' to breathe were life. . .'

and these:

'... That which we are, we are:
One equal temper of heroic hearts,
Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will,
To strive to seek, to find and not to yield.'

'as being really the epigraph of the British character.' The rest of this part treats of the ideal. Here M. Boutmy gives interesting and generous appreciations of some representatives of English literature, of which he says: 'Considered in the whole course of its history English literature is certainly one of the most admirable, the richest, and the most varied in Europe.' On the other hand, he has not a high opinion of the success of the English in cultivating the arts of painting, music, architecture, and sculpture. The second part treats of Human Influences (Le Milieu humain) in two chapters, headed 'The Races which have come from Abroad' and 'The Races Developed on the Soil.' In the second of these chapters we have an extremely interesting account of John Wesley and his work. Part the third has for its subject 'Moral and Social Man,' and the author has much to say about love, sympathy, pride, frankness, and unsociability in England. Part four is devoted to the Political Man, which subject is dealt with in five chapters: the citizen, the party man, the statesman, the law and public spirit, and royalty. The fifth and last part treats of the Individual and the State. The author concludes with these words: 'I have said enough in the preceding pages to show beneath the changing mask the durable characters which form the physiognomy of the Englishman. These characters are the effect of causes which dominate the game of political, administrative, economical, and social history, which are so interesting in other respects, and which, nevertheless, do not fail to give in part movement and even direction to that history. It is they which have made in the last century, and will continue to make in the one now beginning, the rich originality of England.' This is an excellent work, written by an evident well-wisher of England, who has thoroughly mastered his subject. We warmly commend it to the notice of the English reading public at this critical period of our history, when both a new century and a new reign are beginning.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. Ltd.—'Ephémère Critica; or, Plain Truths about Current Literature,' by John Churton Collins. This handsomely printed volume contains a collection of essays on English literature and criticism, reprinted from the Saturday Review, the Pall Mall Gazette, and the Nineteenth Century. There is much that is true and instructive in them, more particularly in those dealing with English literature at the Universities; and Mr. Collins's trenchant remarks on the prolixity and futility of some of the notes to Shakespeare's 'Hamlet' in the Clarendon Press edition appear to be justified by the examples he has selected for criticism. At the same time it is quite possible to overestimate the value of the teaching of English literature at the Universities even with the best possible text-books. A man may acquire a certain knowledge of the best English classics without fully understanding them, as Mr. Collins's examination of the Oxford 'Hamlet' convincingly demonstrates. All the technical schools in the world cannot make an author. Over and over again great writers have arisen and astonished the world by their varied knowledge of men and things, who have, nevertheless, received very little instruction and no university training whatever. Shakespeare and Dickens are conspicuous examples of this. But they, like all great men, made the best use of their opportunities, and were always educating themselves. Self-help and self-education, combined with a full determination to do with all one's might the kind of literary work one feels called upon to undertake, are far better aids than a hard and fast red-tape system to becoming an author; but even these must be accompanied by the literary faculty. Mr. Collins compares the condition and prospects of science with those of literature very much to the detriment of the latter. But is not the inferiority of literature due to the fact that the aims and objects of too many of its disciples are less worthy? Few writers publish works on science unless they have really something worth making known to the public; but of how comparatively few books in belles-lettres can this be said? There are so many motives for rushing into print now-a-days, when everyone has mastered the three R's. Mr. Collins's dissatisfaction with current literature is not peculiar to himself, nor is it a new thing under the sun. Thomas Carlyle, writing to his brother John of his new 'History of the French Revolution,' said: 'In this (defiant) humour I write my book, without hope of it, except of being done with it; properly beginning to as good as feel that literature has gone mad in this country, and will not yield food to any honest cultivator of it.' Mr. Collins speaks in deservedly high terms of the majority of London publishers in his essay on the 'Present Functions of Criticism'; but we think he lays rather too much stress on the tendency of some critics to show an undue spirit of tolerance and charity to trash. As Mr. Sleary said to Mr. Gradgrind of his circus troupe: 'Don't be croth with uth poor vagabonth. People muth be amuthed.' We recommend this work to all interested in literature and criticism.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Ralph Roister Doister,' by Nicholas Udall. Edited with a preface, notes, and glossary by W. H. Williams, M.A., and P. A. Robin, M.A. This old comedy, written in all probability about the year 1552, the author being a Canon of Windsor, has now been added by Messrs. Dent to their well-known 'Temple Dramatists' series. It is well worthy of such distinction, and in its present well printed, neatly bound form should make the acquaintance of a much wider circle of readers. The preface contains some interesting particulars relating to the life of the author, the various editions of the play, its position in dramatic evolution, character, and so forth, while the glossary and notes explain the meaning of all doubtful words and passages.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'A Syndicate of Sinners,' by Gertrude Warden. Though crude and superficial in style, Miss Warden's novel contains so many astounding situations that it is pretty certain to provoke interest. Sensation in these pages fairly runs riot. The Syndicate of Sinners is composed of a number of unscrupulous scoundrels who, under the guise of philanthropy, levy blackmail on all who are weak enough to fall into their clutches. Their chief prey is a wealthy baronet, who is designed as a matrimonial catch for the leading conspirator's daughter. To render him more amenable to treatment he has been carefully secluded from all his friends and encouraged in the morphia habit. Happily his son, supposed to have been drowned at sea, returns from South Africa, and, like a Trojan, devotes himself to the loosening of his father's bonds. It must be confessed, however, that he goes a very roundabout way to effect his purpose, but this is necessary in the interests of the story. The colouring of the melodramatic figures is laid on with a lavish hand and there is little or no subtlety in their delineation; indeed, the characters generally come of a somewhat curious stock.

From Mr. H. J. Drane.—'John Townley: a Tale for the Times,' by Robert Thynne. We doubt whether Mr. Thynne's work, though readable enough in its way, will quite hold the attention of fiction-lovers. Novels with a purpose require to be written with unusual skill and self-restraint—the disagreeable medicine, so to speak, has to be nicely disguised under a covering of sweetstuff; and it too frequently happens, as in this case, that the author injudiciously pushes his own opinions forward to the detriment of his story as a portrayal of human types and idiosyncrasies. The influence of the Catholic religion in Ireland which Mr. Thynne seeks to expose may, it is true, form a suitable motif for a novel, but it should be so wrapped up in the plot that the reader should scarcely be aware of the impression he is imbibing. We are criticising 'John Townley' of course purely as a work of fiction; in other respects there are many passages of great interest and value, and the whole book is an eloquent testimony to the author's close study of Irish questions.

From Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.—'Old and New Century Bells: Six Addresses delivered during Advent at the Churches of St. Mary Magdalene and St. James, Taunton,' by the Rev. John K. Vernon, M.A. The thoughtful reader will find in these addresses much to appeal to his sympathies and higher judgment. The subjects with which they deal are Morality, Philanthropy, Devotion, Faith, Science, and Civilisation, and the Coming Century. On each of these topics the author enunciates many profound truths. The volume concludes with an 'In Memoriam' poem on her late Majesty Queen Victoria. The title of the book is founded on Tennyson's well-known lines, commencing 'Ring out the Old, ring in the New,' each peal being taken to represent a fresh subject.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—The new volume of the pretty 'Bibelot' series is 'Leaves from Pepys' Diary.' In this Bibelot the attempt has been made to bring together under subject headings some of the many interesting phases of public and private life scattered through the 'Diary.'

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'The Black Tortoise: being the Strange Story of Old Frick's Diamond,' by Frederick Viller. This is a narrative of the 'detective' description, only the detective in the present instance proves too clever by far and is obliged to call in the assistance of some friends to aid him in his work. The account of his experiences is highly absorbing. We are told in the first place how he makes the acquaintance of the Frick family, and of the curious likeness existing between Miss Frick and her maid, Evelina Reierston. The diamond ornament, known as the Black Tortoise, had then disappeared, but was recovered through a stroke of good luck. Shortly after this a young Englishman named Howell makes his appearance in Christiania (where the scene of the story is laid), and is received with great cordiality by old Frick on account of benefits received from his supposed father. Howell plays a prominent part in the story. Then the diamond disappears again. Suspicion falls on Evelina Reierston, and the likelihood of her guilt is confirmed by a snapshot photograph which Howell has taken. In this she is represented as standing before the cupboard in which the diamond is kept, evidently examining something which she has just abstracted from the case. But at the trial it is pointed out that it could not possibly be Evelina, because the girl in the photograph has a ring on the ring finger of the left hand, and Evelina, when a little girl, broke this finger in a fall, and through unskilful treatment of the fractured bone is unable to wear a ring. Suspicion now points to Sigrid Frick, and the poor detective has the agony of knowing that his well-meaning efforts towards the unravelling of the crime have only resulted in the arrest of the woman he loves. It is now that he calls in the assistance of his friends. How it all ends we must not deprive the reader of the pleasure of finding out. The story is ingeniously constructed, and will well repay perusal.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'Victoria the Good,' by Clare Jerrold. The author of this pleasant, chatty volume must have devoted much time and research to its production. It is an anecdotal biography of our lamented Queen, arranged in four sections. The first, relating to her infancy and childhood; the second to her girlhood and accession; the third dealing with the period of womanhood and of her happy married life; and the fourth telling the events of her long years of widowhood. The author calls this little book 'Victoria the Good: True Stories of the Home Life of Queen-Empress, Wife and Mother.' The volume amply fulfils the promise of the title. The stories are true, and some are even new to us which, considering the number of biographies of her late Majesty that have come under our notice is quite remarkable. But we have no space for quoting any of them, and so must refer readers to the book itself, which is embellished by an admirable likeness of Queen Victoria taken during her recent visit to Ireland.

From Messrs. P. S. King & Son.—'Elements of Statistics,' by Arthur L. Bowley, M.A., F.S.S. This is a very useful and, we venture to add, very interesting book. Objection may be made to the last statement; indeed, some people object to statistics altogether, and readers of 'The Chimes' and 'Hard Times' will know what a strongly expressed dislike Charles Dickens entertained for that science. But, after all, had the great novelist been spared to us some years longer, he might have modified his views with regard to statistics as we know he did on some other questions against which he entertained equally strong prejudices. Within the comparatively brief limits of some 320 pages, Mr. Bowley tells us in plain English all that is necessary for a clear understanding of the science of statistics. He is no hard and fast believer in the perfect accuracy of every statistical return, or in the infallibility of Board of Trade reports, but honestly says: 'Some numerical errors cannot be avoided when many workers are involved, for some will be inaccurate, some unintelligent, some will not obtain complete information, and when their reports are compiled, there will be occasional mistakes in copying and errors in tabulation.' Beginning with a lucid explanation of the scope and meaning of statistics, Mr. Bowley proceeds to explain the general method of statistical investigation; he then gives illustrations of method, including the population Census, which will soon have a personal interest for everybody, the wages census, and the work of the labour department and statistics of England's foreign trade. There are many other questions dealt with by Mr. Bowley in this work which must have cost him much time and diligent research.

From Mr. John Lane.—'In His Own Image,' by Frederick Baron Corvo. A number of curiously quaint Italian stories are gathered together in this volume. To the majority of readers they will probably not prove very attractive, and only those of a fanciful imagination will be able to appreciate their delicate charm. In the matter of imagination the boy Toto, the narrator of the descriptions or histories, is certainly not wanting, and there is something unutterably weird and uncanny in some of his confessions. When it comes to imagining himself dying—on a voyage to Purgatory, the border land of which he touches and then returns—all the time uttering disjointed sentences descriptive of the sensations he passes through—we think it is time to close the book and devote a few moments to thoughtful reflection.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—‘A Tale of a Lonely Parish,’ by F. Marion Crawford. It has been our rare good fortune in these latter days—when it may still be said with even more truth than in the days of King Solomon, ‘Of the making of books’ (especially novels and such novels!) ‘there is no end’—to read for the first time, in this handsome yet cheap edition, the above-named story, which, as a notice prefixed to the volume informs us, first appeared in February 1886 and has since been eleven times reprinted. Being by this time such an established favourite we will not dilate upon the many good qualities of one of the pleasantest novels we ever read, which reminds us of Jane Austen at her best, but confine ourselves to advising those who have not yet read it to do so at once, wishing them the same pleasure we have experienced in the society of the excellent vicar, the Rev. Augustin Ambrose and his kindly spouse, their protégé the somewhat priggish undergraduate, John Short, whose niaiserie are so amusing, the beautiful and sad Mrs. Goddard and her pretty daughter Nellie, and of that best of landlords and squires, Mr. Juxon, and, let us add, his faithful canine friend and preserver the bloodhound Stamboul.

From the same.—‘West African Studies,’ by Mary H. Kingsley. Second edition, with additional chapters. So much has been written about this fascinating book that little need be said here. In the preface to the first edition Miss Kingsley went unnecessarily out of her way to apologise for it and its literary style. But as the book itself brims over with information and instruction, its existence is justified; and, as for the style, that is so frank and friendly that the reader’s goodwill is at once gained and his attention captivated. And when he has read it through to the end he lays it down with a half-selfish feeling of regret that the bright spirit that conceived, the warm heart that animated, and the gentle hand that wrote it can never more minister to the needs and instruction of others. Mr. George Macmillan has written for this new and handsome edition an extremely interesting and sympathetic biographical notice of the heroic, patriotic, and unselfish Englishwoman whose memory will be fitly perpetuated by the Mary Kingsley Hospital for tropical diseases at Liverpool, and the Mary Kingsley Society of South Africa for the study of native customs and institutions, and the promotion of a better understanding between the native races and the English. This second edition contains four additional chapters and an appendix, ‘An Early African Voyage,’ which were not included in the first edition, and it has for frontispiece a portrait of Miss Kingsley.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—‘Strange Happenings.’ A collection of some eighteen short stories, mostly by well-known writers. Mr. H. D. Lowry describes the pathetic experiences of a poor woman practically hounded to death by her neighbours in a fishing village of Cornwall; Mr. Clark Russell relates the sequel of the Admiralty’s search after hidden treasure in the Salvage Islands; Mr. W. E. Norris has something to say about a philosopher’s son who fell in love with an actress and committed suicide because she very properly refused to marry him; Mr. Francis Prevost tells a peculiar story about a man and his wife; Mr. F. C. Philips is revealed in a romantic vein; and there are other contributions by Mr. Hamlin Garland, Mr. Frank Hird, Mr. H. B. Marriott-Watson, Mrs. Fleming, Miss Clara Savile-Clarke, and Mr. Grant Allen. The story of the last-named author is a very characteristic piece of work, and ghastly in the extreme. A hard, callous medical man, with leanings towards psychical research, is warned by his wife on her death-bed that in the event of certain things happening her feet shall dog him day and night to the grave. So as a means of preventing this unwished-for contingency he cuts them off. But they turn up all the same, and follow him, pitter-patter, pitter-patter, wherever he goes. Ultimately he dies of terror. Mr. W. E. Norris’s bright unaffected stories are a pleasant relief after this horror, and on the whole we are inclined to think them the best in the volume.

From the same.—‘The Psalms of David, with Brief Notes for use in Church or at Home,’ by B. W. Randolph, M.A. This is the new volume of ‘The Library of Devotion,’ now being issued by Messrs. Methuen & Co. It is an extremely pretty and handy little volume, printed on thin paper in flexible binding, but surely this, above all, is the kind of book of which the edges should be cut, for it just a little exercises one’s patience if one wants hastily to turn up a particular text to find it hidden away between uncut leaves, especially as the cutting of the leaves of those thin-paper books is unusually difficult. Elegance (if, indeed, uncut is the more elegant) should, in such cases, be sacrificed to utility.

From Messrs. Moran & Co., Aberdeen; Messrs. W. R. Russell & Co., London.—‘The Weird of “The Silken Thomas”’: an Episode of Anglo-Irish History,’ by R. Manifold-Craig. There are few more striking episodes in the history of ‘that most distressful country’ Ireland than that of the rebellion of Lord Thomas Fitzgerald, styled, from the richness of his caparisons, the Silken Lord. Believing a false report that his father, the Earl of Kildare, who was imprisoned in the Tower of London on a charge of treason against King Henry VIII., had been beheaded, young Lord Thomas rode into Dublin at the head of a retinue of 140 horsemen, and, appearing before the council assembled in St. Mary’s Abbey, then and there renounced his allegiance to the English King, despite the remonstrances and tears of Lord Chancellor Cromer. This rash step was shortly followed by the cold-blooded murder, in the presence of Lord Thomas and two of his uncles, of Archbishop Allen who had rendered himself obnoxious to the Geraldines. But after carrying on for two years a devastating civil war Silken Thomas surrendered to the authorities, and about six months later suffered, on February 3, 1537, at Tyburn, with five of his uncles, the death of a traitor. Mr. Manifold-Craig has written an excellent historical romance founded on this insurrection, and with it has skilfully interwoven the love-story of Martin Fallon, scrivener and cripple, thus relieving with bright and pleasing love passages the more gloomy scenes of sedition, privy conspiracy, and rebellion. The author has successfully reproduced the quaint language and spelling of the period; and, by permission of Lords Frederick and Walter Fitzgerald, has appropriately dedicated this romance to their nephew, the youthful Duke of Leinster.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Limited.—‘First on the Antarctic Continent: being an Account of the British Antarctic Expedition, 1898-1900,’ by C. E. Borchgrevink, F.R.G.S. If this record of an adventurous mission, carried out with splendid energy and enterprise, scarcely increases our scientific knowledge to the extent we had anticipated, it yet presents many features of abundant interest. Among the results accruing from his work, Mr. Borchgrevink claims to have established for the first time the possibility of a well-appointed expedition wintering in South Victoria Land; that he has fixed the approximate position of the South Magnetic Pole and made many carefully recorded meteorological observations, besides adding to our knowledge of Antarctic biology and geology; that he has discovered several new islands and closely surveyed the coast line from Cape Adare to Mount Terror; and finally that he and two of his companions, with the help of dogs and sledges, penetrated further south than had been done by any previous explorer. How these results and others were obtained is graphically shown in this volume, the text being aided by nearly two hundred illustrations, including portraits and maps. In one respect the expedition was exceedingly lucky they only lost one man by death, Mr. Nikolai Hanson, the taxidermist; and, indeed, they seem, generally speaking, to have enjoyed wonderful immunity from accidents and ill-health. There is something remarkably fascinating in Mr. Borchgrevink’s account of the experiences of himself and his companions in the frozen land, and it has certainly lost nothing in the manner of its presentation. The volume derives still further value from the fact that another expedition to the South Pole has been organised by the British Government and the Royal Geographical Society jointly.

From Mr. John C. Nimmo.—‘The Social Life of the Hebrews,’ by the Rev. Edward Day. This is certainly one of the most interesting volumes that has yet appeared in the ‘Semitic’ series. The author divides his work into two parts, respectively devoted to a consideration of the social observances among the Hebrews at the time of the Judges and at the period of the monarchy. Under these divisions he writes of the environment, the clan, the family, the social significance of sacrifice, the influence of individuals, the religion of the people, the rise of nationalism, the industrial life, literature and education, warfare, the purification of Yahwism, and so forth. He has a pleasant, agreeable style, and his knowledge of the subject, aided by painstaking research, is indisputable. There are several appendices treating of important matters rising out of the subject of the book.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—‘King and Emperor: the Life History of Edward VII.,’ by Arthur Mee. An outline of the leading events of his Majesty’s career. Albeit a little wanting in distinction, the book will readily find acceptance with a large body of readers. Each of the chapters is devoted to a consideration of some special period or feature in the King’s life—i.e. his youth, education, manhood, work, wealth, character, and so forth. There are several illustrations.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—‘The Strange Wooing of Mary Bowler.’ By Richard Marsh. A very clever and amusing tale of unflagging interest, abounding in well-drawn characters, whose talk is terse and pointed. Indeed, very little adaptation is needed to fit it for the stage. This, perhaps, is not remarkable, inasmuch as the interest centres in a private theatrical performance at the residence of the great millionaire, Mr. Bowler, of a new comedy-drama called ‘The Daughter of a Genius,’ by a rising young dramatist, Mr. Eric Temperley. This piece is to be produced (as the great Mr. Bowler tells the dramatist) on the occasion of 'the return to her father's halls, temporarily, of my daughter, the—ah—Marchioness of Crawley.' Mr. Bowler, however, has another daughter, who is unmarried, Miss Mary Bowler, of whom Eric Temperley is enamoured; and it is partly with the object of giving Mary and himself a love scene to act and partly with a view of showing Mr. Bowler in his true colours that he has written the play in question. The piece is acted by members of the house party; some of whom, like the company thronging Mr. Bowler's charming little theatre to witness the performance, are highly respectable, while there are others 'whose high respectability was not so well established.' The very telling descriptions of the actors, the performance, and the make-up of the two leading characters, which make-up well-nigh converts the comedy-drama into a tragedy and certainly precipitates the fall of the curtain, must be read in Mr. Richard Marsh's pages, wherein will also be found the result of Eric Temperley's strange wooing. They who begin to read this entertaining story will not feel disposed to lay it down before they have reached the end.

From Messrs. Geo. Philip & Son.—'The Cyclists' Touring Guides,' by A. W. Rumney, M.A. Vol. I. England (South). The object of these touring guides is to put the cyclist in the way of making the best of a cycling holiday. Most of these tours are founded on the compiler's personal experience as a cycling tourist during the last twenty years, but he has also had the assistance of many friends in various parts of England. The volume before us contains that part of England south of Oxford, is provided with an excellent map, and produced with the accuracy and neatness we are accustomed to associate with all Messrs. George Philip & Son's publications.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'John Knox,' by Marion Harland. Following upon her previous studies of Charlotte Brontë, William Cowper, and Hannah More, the author in this volume of the 'Literary Hearthstones' library gives us the life of one of the most picturesque religious figures in both Scottish and English history, John Knox. The outline of his career is not so rigidly adhered to but that a very vivid impression may be derived of the great movement in which he played such a prominent part, though of course anything like a detailed account of the Reformation in Scotland does not come within the scope of the book. Readers will find this recital of the chief events in the famous reformer's life of remarkable interest, and evidence is forthcoming on almost every page of the great care bestowed on its preparation. There are several illustrations, including portraits of John Knox, George Wishart (from whom he received his early training), Mary Queen of Scots, Mary of Lorraine, Lord Darnley, and Regent Moray; and pictures of the Castle at St. Andrews and John Knox's house, Edinburgh.

From Messrs. George Routledge & Son.—'A Bid for a Coronet,' by Mrs. C. N. Williamson. The substitution of one baby for another, in order that a hated individual may be kept from inheriting a title and landed estate is made the foundation for Mrs. Williamson's latest novel. But something more of interest attaches to the transaction than this. The substituted child has a twin brother who is left with his mother, a poor woman, while he himself enjoys all the luxuries of a high position, with cultured environment. In after years he falls a victim to the designs of his unscrupulous rival, and is supposed to have been drowned. But even then the upholders of the family name are not to be discouraged, and they find out the twin brother, who has had a varied career in America, and pass him off as the deceased duke, thus again frustrating the claims of the enemy to the title. Ultimately a marriage certificate is the means of conferring happiness on those mainly concerned. That Mrs. Williamson weaves a most interesting and exciting narrative from these events, we need hardly tell the reader who is acquainted with her constructive powers. The book falls little short of her best efforts and may be recommended to the lover of sensation with confidence.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co.—'The Troubles of a Shovel Hat, and other Stories,' by Max Baring. Mr. Baring's humour has scarcely become more subtle since he wrote 'Whiffs from a Short Briar.' It still lies on the surface, and is apt to become a little too loudly accentuated. In one or two of the stories, however, he indulges in no comicalities at all, and then he is even in worse plight, for his abilities are not of a character to show to advantage in serious prose. But the volume will interest a number of not very critical readers, who will no doubt find it a pleasant after-dinner companion.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Handbook to the Administrations of Great Britain during the Nineteenth Century, 1801–1901,' by F. C. Carr-Gomm. It was a happy thought that suggested to Mr. Carr-Gomm the compiling of this handy book of reference. The author says in his preface that, having experienced a difficulty in knowing where to find in histories and reference books a short notice relating to any recent political change, the idea occurred to him of arranging the political history of England during the nineteenth century under the different Ministries. There is at the beginning of the volume a table showing all the Administrations from the beginning of the reign of King George the Third until Mr. Pitt's first ministry, which lasted seventeen years and was only ended by his resignation on the King's refusal to entertain the question of Roman Catholic emancipation. To this long administration the first chapter is devoted, and each succeeding chapter contains a concise history of the administrations which followed during the last century, that is, beginning with Mr. Addington's in 1801 and ending with the Marquis of Salisbury's third term of office which began in 1895 and has continued into the twentieth century. The first edition, published in 1869, brought the history of Mr. Gladstone's first administration down to November of that year. This new, revised, and enlarged edition carries on the history to the close of the nineteenth century. Mr. Carr-Gomm has conferred a boon upon those for whom this useful work is intended by the accuracy with which he has performed his arduous but evidently congenial task.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell, 2 Amen Corner, E.C.—'Tales of a Colporteur,' by J. Macalister. Some odd experiences are related in this unpretentious little volume, and the zeal of the author in promulgating the truths of Protestantism is very manifest, if occasionally a little misplaced.

From the Unicorn Press.—'The Day of Small Things,' by Isabel Fry. The author of this volume seems to have been of a very sensitive, imaginative turn when a little girl. But her experiences are undoubtedly interesting, and they are related with an appreciation of effect which, when not too strongly marked, adds much to their charm. Even the titles have evidently been designed with the object of provoking the reader's curiosity, for who would imagine that 'Stars,' 'A Journey of Discovery,' 'Special Providences,' 'Followers of St. Simeon,' 'Silkworms and Tigers,' &c., cover the revelations they do? A good word should be awarded the get-up of the volume, which reveals an artistic designer.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Georgie,' by S. E. Kiser. The other day we came across a book called the 'Pa Papers,' in which bad spelling was the most prominent feature. We do not know if the author of 'Georgie' is also responsible for 'Pa Papers,' but certainly the spelling is similar, and we note in the table of contents that Pa plays a prominent part in nine out of the thirty-seven articles in the volume. Perhaps the following extract will give the reader a sufficient idea of the character, style, and spelling of 'Georgie,' and render comment superfluous. The title of the article from which the extract is taken is 'A Pleasant Evening at Home.' 'My teacher told me, One day, after I rote a peace about the discovery of America: "Georgie that's fine. Rite some more." "What about?" I ast her. "Oh, almost ennything," she says. "I tell you What. Every time ennything happens at home You rite about it. That's the best way to lurn how to Put your thots on paper." We have only to add that the work is illustrated in the style of the new school of art, combining the juvenile conceptions of a self-taught schoolboy artist with the execution of the Chinese genius who produced the first willow pattern plate. The frontispiece is supposed to represent a farm. The animals are like those in a toy Noah's Ark, the haycocks are like Indian wigwams, the trees are woolly, and of the perspective the less said the better.

From the same.—'A Rainy June, and Don Gesualdo,' by 'Ouida.' The addition of this volume to the 'Popular Copyright Novels' of the publisher will be very welcome to the majority of readers, who will thus have placed within their power, at a modest price, one of the most characteristic examples of the author's skill. The slender plot of 'A Rainy June' is cobwebbed across a number of letters. It is 'light as air,' and yet wonderfully interesting. Nothing could more forcibly show the suggestive delicacy of 'Ouida's' method, or the deftness with which she can picture a situation without descending to the coarseness of bare description. Our only objection is that the story is spun out a little too long, but even this we are not thoroughly conscious of until we have finished. The book is quite a study in artistic treatment.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'My Indian Queen,' by Guy Boothby. It is usual for young gentlemen in sensational fiction whenever they are 'hard up' or 'stony broke' to embark on an adventurous career whereby they may win both fortune and fair lady. Of this well-known attribute, Mr. Guy Boothby has taken full advantage in this novel. At least half the work is occupied with a recital of the hero's impecunious vicissitudes and his gallant bearing as a leader of fashion. In the uncongenial confines of the Fleet he meets a gay roysterer, one Captain O'Rourke, who bears a distant resemblance to our old friend Porthos, of 'Three Musketeers' fame. On emerging from his prison-house, he fights a duel with a rival in love, and, leaving him for dead, makes tracks for the coast, hotly pursued by the officers of the law. After a number of hairbreadth escapes, he and O'Rourke manage to get on board a vessel bound for Calcutta, and the scene is then shifted to Indian territory. O'Rourke has a wild project on foot for deposing the powerful Rajah of Jahlmeer and placing his nephew on the throne. By this means the friends hope to become rich beyond measure. But the venture entails enormous risks. Of the full force of these the reader will receive an exhilarating impression before he reaches the end of the book. Mr. Boothby's brisk and vigorous narrative admirably suits the spirit of the story, and the adventures of the hero and his herculean friend are thrilling in the extreme.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co. — 'A Soldier for a Day: a Story of the Italian War of Independence,' by E. Spender. The stirring incidents of this book are enacted amid a perfect shower of bullets, and the dull booming of cannon is heard in all directions. We seem almost to detect the smell of gunpowder in turning over its pages. Mrs. Spender's novel is not particularly strong in plot—indeed, something very like an anti-climax is approached to; but it possesses attractions of martial picturesqueness and romance that will amply atone for this defect. The 'Soldier of a Day' is a young and beautiful girl of Perugia, Francesca Morone, who, disguising herself in her twin brother's uniform, takes his place in the Bersaglieri, the rifle brigade of the Piedmontese army. Here, during a day's service, she performs many heroic acts, and is instrumental in saving her captain's life. Her brave deeds, which have earned the medaglia al valore, are credited to her brother Giovanni, who was in reality lying wounded in bed at the time. From her spirited conduct, however, proceed a number of interesting and romantic complications, which are certain to arouse the reader's attention. The story is one of much natural charm.

From the same.—'Street Dust, and other Stories,' by Ouida. 'Street Dust,' the story from which this volume takes its title, is the first of five which make up Ouida's newest collection of touchingly pathetic tales, each succeeding one being sadder than its predecessor with the sole exception of the fifth and last, 'Gerry's Garden.' When the newspapers reported not long ago how very intense was the cold in Italy, and how all the flowers in the Campagna had been killed by the frost, those persons who have ever wintered in Rome and seen the poor creatures who sell flowers in the streets might well think with pity of their only too probable fate this winter—starvation. 'Street Dust' gives us in Ouida's most picturesque language a graphic recital of the fate of two poor orphan girls, whose father, a shepherd, having had some share in the capture of a noted brigand, is despatched by a dagger-stroke one evening as he is taking his sheep to drink. Life being no longer safe in the locality for the widow and two children, she takes her little ones with her to the Campagna and there gains a precarious living by flower-selling in the streets of Rome. In the fifth winter after her husband's murder the mother dies of starvation, leaving Prisca and Petronilla, aged twelve and ten. The terrible experiences of these two poor children, who try to sell flowers without having a hawker's license, are most feelingly told by Ouida, who is seen at her best in such recitals as this sympathetically written volume contains.

From Mr. Effingham Wilson.—'His Lordship's Whim,' by Gordon Cuming Whadcoat. We are sorry that Mr. Wilson, in again resuming the publication of fiction after an interval of twenty-five years, should not have had a better novel to give us. However, 'His Lordship's Whim' is undoubtedly original in its leading idea, and several of the situations are decidedly startling. Lord Mattingbourne is regarded among his class as an

'eccentric,' and his actions, as revealed in these pages, thoroughly justify the title. He has an only son, the Hon. Ivor Treherne, who, on coming of age, finds a curious surprise awaiting him. It seems that Lord Mattingbourne, in his disgust for the women of London society, has prepared an experience for his offspring 'such as no man has enjoyed since the creation of the world, save Adam.' In an isolated province in Norway, where men and women are conspicuous only by their absence, he has purchased an estate, and on this estate he has brought up from early infancy a young girl of refined but illegitimate parentage, who has never been allowed to penetrate beyond the walls of the grounds, and knows nothing whatever of the outside world—in fact, has never seen a man or been told that there is such a being in existence! It is the old lord's earnest desire that his son shall fall in love with this girl, who is exceedingly beautiful. To bring about this result he paints her portrait (being himself concealed from his subject), so that when Ivor goes north to meet the reclus, he is, without knowing it, quite familiar with her appearance, for her portrait has long been a source of the greatest admiration to him as it hangs in the study at home. So the prince travels north to release the enchanted princess, and great is her wonderment and rejoicing when she sees him. And he brings her forth to partake of the joys of the outside world, being terribly afraid that when she is able to contrast him with other men, much of her early partiality for himself will depart. Nevertheless, all ends happily, though for a time the couple are terribly harassed by one Christine Halvorsen, who has taken an unholy sensuous liking for the hero, with a corresponding hatred for the lovely, simple-minded Theresa.

NEW EDITION.—The Leadenhall Press have issued a revised and improved edition of 'Baby's Record (Mother's Notes about her Baby),' by the Rev. R. I. Woodhouse, M.A. The work in its resuscitated form is prefaced by a very amusing review of its contents by Sir Walter Besant, extracted from the pages of the Illustrated London News. It supplies an interesting method of chronicling the physical features and doings of a baby from its birth, noting the dates of baptism, vaccination, first speech, and so forth, which we are sure many a loving mother—we are scarcely so certain about the father—will gladly take advantage of. And how nice for the baby when he (or she) grows up to read this chronicle of his early proceedings! We should add that the volume is as prettily got up as the occasion requires—that is, in accordance with the wishes of fond mothers in regard to their offspring.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

* In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimètres.

HISTOIRE DE LA LITTÉRATURE ALLEMANDE. Par M. A. BOSSERT, Inspecteur Général de l'Instruction publique. Un fort volume in-16 de 1,120 pages. Broché, 5 fr.; cartonné toile, 5 fr. 50.

Cette histoire, qui embrasse la littérature allemande dans toute son étendue, depuis les origines jusqu'en 1900, est un ouvrage de première main, qui se fonde partout sur les documents originaux. La période contemporaine, qui n'a jamais été présentée dans son ensemble, a été l'objet d'un soin particulier. Chaque partie est accompagnée d'une note bibliographique indiquant les ouvrages les plus importants qui sont à lire ou à consulter. Un Index alphabétique et une Table chronologique facilitent les recherches.

L'ANNÉE SCIENTIFIQUE ET INDUSTRIELLE, fondée par LOUIS FIGUIER. 44^e année (1900), par ÉMILE GAUTIER. Un volume in-16 avec 64 figures, broché, 3 fr. 50.

EXTRAIT DE LA TABLE DES MATIÈRES: Cosmologie (Astronomie, Météorologie)—Physique—Chimie—Histoire Naturelle (Géologie et Paléontologie, Botanique, Zoologie)—Sciences Biologiques (Physiologie, Médecine, Hygiène)—Agriculture—Arts Industriels—Travaux Publics—Armée et Marine—Géographie—Variétés—Nécrologie.

NOUVEAUX ESSAIS DE CRITIQUE ET D'HISTOIRE, par H. TAINÉ, de l'Académie française. Septième Édition. Un volume in-16 broché, 3 fr. 50.

VASES ANTIQUES DU LOUVRE. DEUXIÈME PARTIE. SALLES E. G. Le style archaïque à figures noires et à figures rouges. Ecoles Ionienne et Attique, par M. E. POTTIER, Membre de l'Institut, Conservateur adjoint des Musées nationaux. 1 vol. in-4°, avec photographies et dessins de JULES DEVILLARD. Broché, 30 fr.; cartonné, 32 fr.

Le Second Album des Vases Antiques du Louvre, par M. E. POTTIER, fournit des documents très complets pour étudier la peinture industrielle des Grecs, depuis le VI^e siècle avant notre ère jusqu'au milieu du V^e. Les reproductions de J. Devillard ont été faites uniquement d'après des photographies, sans l'intermédiaire de dessins ni de retouches, par un procédé qui assure l'absolue fidélité de l'image. Plus de trois cents sujets inédits, repartis dans une cinquantaine de planches, sont ainsi livrés à la publication. Le texte de 150 pages contient la description détaillée de chaque vase.

EN VENTE.

VASES ANTIQUES DU LOUVRE. 1^{re} PARTIE. SALLES A. E. (Les origines. Les styles primitifs. Ecoles rhodienne et corinthienne), par E. POTTIER. 1 vol. in-4°, avec 2 photographies et 332 dessins de JULES DEVILLARD. Broché, 30 fr.; cartonné, 32 fr.

Two Books by EUGENE SCHUYLER

AUTHOR OF 'PETER THE GREAT,' 'AMERICAN DIPLOMACY,' &c.

With Photogravure Portrait. 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

This volume includes a comprehensive Memoir of Eugene Schuyler, by Evelyn Schuyler Schaeffer, and Essays entitled 'Count Leo Tolstoy Twenty Years Ago,' 'The Minnesota Heir of a Serbian King,' and 'The Lost Plant.'

Uniform with the above. 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

Italian Influences

Mr. Schuyler's long residence in Italy and his unusual equipment give distinction and value to this volume, which contains a score of Essays on subjects connected with art and literary topics in Italy.

'The first volume includes a sympathetic memoir by EVELYN SCHUYLER SCHAEFFER, a lengthy study of Tolstoi, and some Miscellaneous Papers. The second, entitled "Italian Influences," includes Schuyler's studies upon "Landor and Italy," "Dickens in Genoa," "Madame de Genlis on the Riviera," "Shelley with Byron," "George Sand in Italy," with many more whose titles are equally promising. The memoirs prove to be interesting reading, as they contain numerous letters which bear upon the various international crises during Mr. Schuyler's diplomatic service; while here and there we come upon a bit of literary criticism, or a glimpse of behind the scenes at some exalted personage, that is well worth quoting.'—COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER (New York).

Unforeseen Prolongation of the War

Owing to the delay in the publication of important official despatches relating to earlier operations, and to the unforeseen prolongation of the War, which has made it impossible to refer many highly controversial points to the officers principally concerned, it has been found necessary to defer somewhat the issue of the volumes of THE TIMES' 'History of the War in South Africa.' The object of the Publishers has been to present to the public at the earliest possible moment a standard work of permanent value such as usually only appears many years after, when the subject has lost much of its interest; and every endeavour will be made to secure speedy publication consistent with keeping up to the high level already attained in the first volume.

A Note respecting Vol. II.

It is hoped that the second volume, covering operations down to the end of December 1899, will be in the hands of subscribers early in the Spring. It will give a full account of military operations from the declaration of war on October 11, 1899, beginning with the Boer invasion of Cape Colony and dealing in succession with the battles of Talana, Elandsagte, Rietfontein, Nicholson's Nek, Lombard's Kop, Willow Grange, Belmont, Enslin, Modder River, Magersfontein, Stormberg, and Colenso, as well as with the strategical situation in its different stages during the first three months of the war. The descriptions of the battles are written by members of THE TIMES war staff, who were present at them, very fully revised by the editor in collaboration with military experts, and nothing has been left undone to render them absolutely faithful records of the events.

Some of the chapters in this volume will be devoted to an examination of the military conditions precedent to the outbreak, as well as those obtaining during the conduct of the war. These chapters, containing observations on the mobilisation of the Field Forces, analyses of the British and the Boer military systems, with statistics and details of the Boer numbers, artillery, &c., must be regarded in the light of something more than of mere narrative or description, affording as they do an embodiment of facts, coupled with deductions and criticisms by those who viewed the course of events with full knowledge of the technique of the military operations. A Special Feature of this and of succeeding volumes will be the prominence given to the Boer side of the fighting, which has hardly been touched upon in any works yet published.

The volume will also contain maps of the scenes of operations and plans of the battles already enumerated.

AFRICAN REVIEW.—'Almost certain to rank in this country as the work of reference par excellence of recent Transvaal history.'

MELBOURNE ARGUS.—'Without saying that this beautifully printed and illustrated work will be the ideal companion to the South African campaign, it is certainly the most detailed and most comprehensive history that has yet appeared.'

SOUTH AFRICA.—'Will rank as the finest and most complete history of the great campaign.'

FOR THE PROFESSIONS CONCERNED IN THE PRODUCTION OF LITERATURE.

The New 'Literary Year-Book.'

'With regard to the comprehensiveness of the book, it has been our endeavour to include everything that can be reasonably required by anyone at all concerned with literature.' We take these words from Mr. Herbert Morrah's preface to the 1901 edition of 'The Literary Year-Book and Bookman's Directory,' which Mr. George Allen published last week.

Mr. Morrah is on the whole to be congratulated on the improvement in his really useful annual, but we must take exception to his lamentable reflection upon the Society of Authors—especially after telling us that it has been his endeavour to include everything that can be reasonably required by anyone at all concerned with literature. It is painful to think of Sir Walter Besant being asked if he thought Mr. Morrah's allusions answered the 'reasonable requirements' of an admirer of the Society of Authors.

'No Society is known to us which represents literature in this country as it should be represented; there are institutions which do much for the makers of books, but with some of them the dissemination of fads and fallacies is too constant.'

It is impossible, of course, not to admit that the only justification for this remark would lie in its truth, but when we find it facing the following less indefinite reference to the only Society which claims to represent literature at all in this country we feel that it is almost too cruel for publication.

'The test of membership of the Society of Authors (Incorporated) is, as far as I can gather, inadequate. Some of my correspondents appear to think that such membership is a distinction; whereas, and again, of course, it is no distinction at all.'

For an author not to belong to the Society is evidently more of a distinction than to belong to it, according to Mr. Morrah—the members pay subscriptions merely to confer distinction on those who do not join them—sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes.

But we do not agree with the editor of the 'Literary Year-Book,' for as long as the Society of Authors numbers among its members such names as those of Mr. Thomas Hardy, Mr. W. E. Lecky, Mr. Geo. Meredith, and Mrs. Humphry Ward, it must be a distinction to belong to it—a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

PROPOSED MEMORIAL TO
R. D. BLACKMORE.

Mr. Eden Phillpotts, in 'A Note' on the late Mr. R. D. Blackmore, puts in a plea for a memorial of him. 'The late Mr. Black has now,' he says, 'a light-house to keep his memory bright; it is not meet that a greater should be forgotten'; and in another place Mr. Morrah tells us that 'A movement is on foot in his own county of Devon to erect a memorial which shall help men of later generations the more easily to recall those services which he rendered to our own. Very properly this memorial will not be raised by men of letters, nor will the labour of securing the necessary funds be left to them, though they will gladly lend aid. Others, representative of the West, will make this movement successful.'

Who can these 'others' be? Why should it be proper for men of letters not to raise it?

But Mr. Eden Phillpotts does a grave injustice when he says:

'Never has an age been more apt than the present to take a man at his own valuation, though so to do is always to err. A striking example of this wrong judgment was manifested at the passing of Blackmore. . . . He was accepted at his personal estimate: as a humble and unimportant writer, and scarcely a ripple touched the sea of literature when he sank from it. . . . And so it came about that the press, either respecting or resenting his consistent attitude in life, suffered him to go down into the grave unmarked.'

Mr. Blackmore died on the same day as Mr. Ruskin (Jan. 20, 1900), and so far from its being true that the press took no notice of his death—or, as Mr. Phillpotts says, 'suffered him to go down into the grave unmarked,' it is doubtful whether the death of any novelist was ever more universally, generously, or sincerely mourned by the whole body of the press than was that of the author of 'Lorna Doone.' Hardly a paper, important or unimportant, in the British Empire and in the United States but had most kindly notices of him, nor were foreign writers silent.

Mr. Phillpotts lives somewhere in the wilds of Devonshire, and because he does not there see all the world's press he seems to have assumed that Mr. Blackmore's death was allowed to pass unnoticed—but surely the editor of the 'Literary Year-Book' should have corrected a statement which is so unfair to the memory of Mr. Blackmore and so unjust to the whole press.

It is also not correct to say that Mr. Blackmore's personal estimate of himself was that he was 'a humble and unimportant writer'; he was modest and retiring but proud, with the just pride of a man who knows his power.

We the more regret these errors on the part of Mr. Phillpotts as his 'Note' is admirable in many respects and well worthy of being added, as the latest if not the least, to those numberless press tributes to Mr. Blackmore's memory and genius which marked his passing to the grave.

WHAT THE 'LITERARY YEAR-BOOK' CONTAINS.

It contains more or less useful information about Agreements, Book Sales, Copyright, Agents (Lists of Literary), Authors (names and addresses of about 3,000), Artists, Bookbinders, Book Printers, Booksellers, Clubs, Indexers, Periodicals, Publishers, Societies, &c., &c. One of the most interesting chapters is 'A Note on the Making of Books,' by Mr. C. T. Jacobi, who writes, and who has every authority to write, from the artistic printer's point of view.

We are glad to hear from one of such experience that 'a type-written manuscript is no better than one carefully written by hand as far as the printer is concerned, though an author may be able to revise the former more easily before sending it to the printer.' Yes, but this means that the author has to correct two printers instead of one.

With us Mr. Jacobi sighs for something to take the place of the highly calendered, beautifully smooth 'art' paper made necessary by the process block, but which is, as Mr. Jacobi says, 'so very objectionable to the refined touch and sight.' He thinks a better taste is being displayed in the binding of cloth books, and says an ink design on a cloth cover is better than a gold one, as a rule.

'It is a welcome sign to see more and more books issued each year with cut edges—especially novels.' This is capital, because it shows that one may be an admirer of circumspection and yet not a Philistine—for, of course, no one appreciates the value of 'margin' and 'edge' in fine bookmaking more than Mr. Jacobi—he evidently reads his P.C.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. J. A. Steuart's new novel, 'The Eternal Quest,' which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are about to publish, is a romance with a passionate love interest and a military background. The hero is the son of a retired Anglo-Indian general of fame, the heroine the daughter of an army chaplain. The action of the story is varied and rapid, the love interest concentrated, and the dénouement unexpected.

Among the novels to be published by Mr. Murray in April are: 'Mrs. Green,' by 'Christina'; 'Monsieur Beaucaire,' by Booth Tarkington, with illustrations; 'The Wise Man of Sterncross,' by Lady Augusta Noel; and 'On Peter's Island,' a new novel of Russian life, by Arthur R. Ropes and Mary E. Ropes.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have in preparation a fine work giving reproductions of famous pictures from Shakespeare.

Mr. Savage Landor's 'The Chinese Campaign,' upon which he is now actively at work, will contain the only account of the Chinese war and its history in which 'nothing will be concealed or palliated.' Mr. Landor was one of the few unofficial persons permitted to accompany the European officers in their entry into the Forbidden City, and he is perhaps the only eye-witness at liberty to report the whole of what he saw. He rode into the Imperial City with the international forces, through the courtesy of the Russian commander-in-chief, and Mr. Landor's knowledge of the Russian, Chinese, and Japanese languages proved of the greatest value in enabling him to obtain information at first hand. The attractiveness of the book will be further enhanced by a selection from nearly a thousand photographs of the war and the country taken by the author.

The April number of Macmillan's Magazine opens with an anonymous article called 'Literature and Democracy,' and closes with one on 'The Man in the Ranks,' by 'One who has Served.' The first reviews the literary progress of the Victorian Era, and comes to the conclusion that it does not match the progress of the same epoch in the practical and material aspects of life. In 'The Man in the Ranks' the prospects of recruiting are considered when 'the strong incitement to patriotic fervour which the stress of present circumstances has created' no longer operates. The various inducements to take the shilling are passed under review, and the chances of ensuring, under voluntary enlistment, 'a steady, constant, and increasing' supply of recruits examined.

Madame Sarah Grand's new novel, 'Babs the Impossible,' will be published immediately by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. 'The Impossible' is the sobriquet which Babs, the heroine, earns for herself by queer ways and quaint sayings. Most of the story deals with people in and about a country house, and the author dwells upon the isolated position of the women-folk consequent on the migration to the cities of the men of any worth.

Some weeks subsequent to the publication of Mr. J. Stadling's book on Siberian Exploration, entitled 'Through Siberia,' the publishers have had it called to their attention by the Rev. Dr. Henry Lansdell that some twenty years ago he also published two volumes under the same title. Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. regret this oversight and therefore propose in all future editions of Mr. Stadling's book to somewhat alter the title, in order that there may be no further chance of confusing the two books owing to the identity of their titles.

The Revue de Paris is well known as a leading organ of French opinion. Special prominence is given to historical subjects, but literature, science, and current affairs are also treated, and the contents of each number include an instalment of a serial novel and a short story. Next month Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will be the publisher in Great Britain of the Review, which is published fortnightly.

The long-promised volume on 'German Bookplates,' in Messrs. Bell's 'Ex-Libris' series, will be published immediately after Easter. It deals with German and Austrian Ex-Libris from the fifteenth century to the present day, and contains nearly 250 illustrations. The volume has been specially written for the series by Count zu Leiningen-Westerburg, who has the largest collection of bookplates on the Continent, and is well known as a writer on the subject. This is the first book that has appeared on German Ex-Libris in this country, and should be of interest to all students of heraldry, engraving, and German art in general. The volume has been translated by Mr. C. R. Dennis.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. have in the press and will publish immediately the long-promised letters of Sir Philip Francis, under the title of 'The Francis Letters,' with a note on the Junius controversy by C. F. Keary. The letters cover a wide field both in space and time. Written by many members of one family during three generations and nearly three-quarters of a century (beginning about 1750), they afford us glimpses into the social life of America on the eve of the war, of India under Hastings, as well as of London and Brighton in the reign of the Prince Regent.

Mr. W. G. Paulson (Government Examiner for Art) has just completed a book of 'Plant and Floral Studies' for designers, art students, and craftsmen. The drawings, which are of a purely practical description, expressing the salient facts of growth, combined with truthfulness, will be of great assistance to art-workers. The work will be published by Messrs. Truslove, Hanson & Comba, and will be ready in April.

In the April Temple Bar Dr. Salmon discusses the charm of Jane Austen, and reminds us of the handsome amende Scott made on his conversion to a sense of her merits as a novelist. A paper based on Wesley's Journals treats of the great preacher from a literary point of view. 'Shakespeare in Buckinghamshire' introduces the supposed originals of Dogberry and Verges. 'On the Side of the Angels' (the conversion of a coquette); a character study in humble life called 'Miss Bolt'; 'Festina Lente,' an Indian episode; and the conclusion of 'Mademoiselle's Romance,' in addition to the serials, furnish a liberal supply of fiction.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will publish in a few days 'Romantic Essex,' a series of 'Pedestrian Impressions,' by Reginald A. Beckett, with three painter-etchings by F. C. Tilney, this being the first application of Professor Herkomer's process to book illustration.

His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of 'The Passing of Victoria,' a volume of poems on the death of the late Queen, recently published by Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son. This book contains poems by Mr. Thomas Hardy, Sir Lewis Morris, Mrs. F. A. Steel, Mr. W. E. Henley, Mr. A. C. Benson, Violet Fane, the Countess of Cork, Lord Burghclere, Katharine Tynan, &c.

'Mad?' by Mr. J. Pym Loughnan, and 'The Magnetism of Sin,' by 'Esculapius,' are the somewhat sensational titles of two new novels which Messrs. Greening & Co. are about to publish. The author of 'The Magnetism of Sin' is a medical man who has travelled professionally all over the world and has met with many strange experiences in his travels. We are informed that his forthcoming book is founded on fact.

Messrs. George Newnes, Limited, will publish, in their 'Library of Useful Stories': 'The Story of Wild Flowers,' by the Rev. Professor Henslow; 'The Story of Books,' by G. B. Rawlings. In 'Our Neighbours':

'Russian Life in Town and Country,' by Francis H. E. Palmer. In their 'Sixpenny Series of Copyright Works': 'The Marquis of Lossie,' by George Macdonald; 'A Wild Proxy,' by Mrs. Clifford; 'The White Company,' by A. Conan Doyle. In their 'Country Life Library': 'Wall and Water Gardens,' by Miss Jekyll; 'Gardening for Beginners: a Handbook to the Garden,' by E. T. Cook. Also 'Tit-Bits Drawing-book,' containing freehand, freearm, and ambidextrous drawing copies, with analysis and instructions.

**

The Antiquary for April will contain among other articles 'Relics of Sun Worship,' by Henry Jewitt; 'Luther's Bible,' by Mrs. W. E. A. Axon; and 'Curiosities of Ancient Churches,' by H. P. Feasey.

The Rev. John Byles, who died on the 14th inst., was a Congregational minister at Northampton, Ealing, and elsewhere, and was well known in Nonconformist and political circles. His father, Mr. Henry Byles, and his uncle, Mr. William Byles, carried on a first-class bookselling business in Bradford for many years, and founded the Bradford Observer. Among other publications by Mr. John Byles may be mentioned his three books of children's addresses, viz. 'The Legend of St. Mark,' 'Spring Blossoms and Summer Fruit,' and 'The Boy and the Angel.'

**

Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack will publish shortly Book I. of their new 'Century Bible.' The general editor is Professor Walter F. Adeney, M.A., New College, London, author of 'How to Read the Bible.'

**

Fulham has the unique distinction of being the first village in the British Empire to start a paper during the reign of King Edward the Seventh; this paper is the Fulham Argus, a nicely printed halfpenny weekly—or it may be a daily for all we can see to the contrary in No. 1.

**

The Genealogical Magazine for April will contain an illustrated article on 'Wales and the Royal Arms.'

TRADE CHANGES.

† The Examiner, the weekly organ of the Congregational denomination, will be published by Mr. H. R. Allenson, at 2 Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row, E.C., commencing with the first issue in April.

Mr. Karslake has recently opened a branch dépôt at 37 Pond Street, Hampstead, for the sale of bindings by the Guild of Women-Binders. New books will also be sold, but only such as are published at net prices. A School of Wood-Carving and a Design Class have also been established in connection with the dépôt.

Messrs. Sherratt & Hughes, booksellers, Manchester, have removed into their former premises, 27 St. Ann's Street.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 7.—WILLIAM HUTTON, F.A.S.S., of Birmingham, 1723-1815.

It was a fashion among many of the old booksellers to write and publish an account of their own lives; if they had not done so there would probably have been very little known about them by their representatives of to-day.

One wonders whether there was really a compensating sale for these quaint and curious 'Autobiographies,' but to us at least a glimpse of their doings, their manner of life, their successes and their failures, must, I think, possess some degree of interest.

William Hutton wrote the story of his life from memory when he was seventy-five years old: it forms an 8vo. volume of nearly four hundred pages. The title is:—

THE

A PARTICULAR ACCOUNT OF
THE RIOTS AT BIRMINGHAM IN 1791, TO WHICH IS SUBJOINED

THE HISTORY OF HIS FAMILY.

WILLIAM HUTTON, F.A.S.S., at the age of eighty.

There have been other editions published since,* but the material which forms this sketch is taken from this edition of 1816.

Hutton's early career was not unlike that of Thomas Gent. Both were cruelly treated in their early days, and both were runaway apprentices—Gent, with 1s. 5d. in his pocket and three loaves in his wallet; Hutton had 2s. in his pocket, which he had stolen from his uncle.

Hutton, Gent, and Dunton were all poets in their way: they wrote a quantity of matter in rhyme, but as far as I can pretend to judge there was not a spark of the 'divine afflatus' in either of them. Between Dunton and Hutton there was this difference as regards their birth: Hutton's mother said of him that he was the largest child she ever had, but so very ordinary

* There was a third edition, with additional notes by his daughter, published in 1841 in Knight's English Miscellanies, and a fourth edition—'William Hutton and the Hutton Family'—edited by Llewellynn Jewitt, 12mo., was published in 1872 by Warne & Co.

(a soft word for ugly) she was afraid she should never love him. Dunton, on the other hand, says of himself that he was so diminutive a baby that a quart pot could contain the whole of him, but he was called 'a pretty child.' As a baby, Dunton swallowed a bullet, which was all but the death of him: in like manner Hutton when he was about the same age managed to swallow a large hollow brass drop, which caused the utmost consternation in his family, but eventually the brazen bolus 'did no injury.'

William Hutton was born Sept. 30, 1723, at the bottom of Full Street, Derby, on the banks of the Derwent. In 1725, when he was two years old, he began to rely wholly on his own memory for his facts: thenceforward he tells the story of his life year by year very circumstantially. 'At which,' he says, 'those who know me are not surprised. There is not a statement either false or coloured.' This year he was nearly drowned by tumbling into the Derwent, just as Dunton had been before him.

The most remarkable event in 1726 was that he tumbled downstairs from top to bottom and was surprised that he escaped with life. In 1727 he was put into breeches and was taken to visit one of his aunts who told him that he was 'an ugly lad, like his father.' In 1728 he was sent to school to Mr. Thomas West, who often beat his head against a wall, holding it by the hair, 'but never could beat any learning into it.'

In 1730 his play days came to an end, and he was placed in a silk mill. He had now to rise at five every morning for seven years, submit to the cane whenever convenient to the master, and be the constant companion of the most rude and vulgar of the human race.

The next year, while still working at the mill, he saw the wonderful feats performed by one Cadman, in flying from the top of All Saints Steeple to the bottom of St. Michael's. The only other event was that his father broke his walking stick while thrashing him for losing a halfpenny. In 1733 his mother died and he had to live among strangers. At one time he fasted from breakfast one day till noon the next, and then dined on hasty pudding; he had now completed the first ten years of his life, and the following year he was engaged in the manufacture of a gown and petticoat for Queen Charlotte; 'thus,' says he, 'an insignificant animal, nearly naked himself, assisted in clothing a queen.'

The year 1737 was the last of his servitude at the silk mill. He had served seven years there, and now he is sent to his uncle at Nottingham to serve another seven years at stocking-weaving; his uncle was a seriously religious man, but his aunt was as serious a hypocrite. Now that food was more plentiful she begrudged every meal he tasted.

The year 1740 ushered in the greatest frost ever remembered in those times, it lasted from New Year's Day to March,* in the severest part of it Hutton's wearing apparel was a thin waistcoat, without lining, and no coat. In 1741 things went on prosperously for a time; he made shift somehow to obtain a genteel suit of clothes and 'the girls eyed him with some attention.' But he detested the frame, and an unhappy quarrel with his uncle caused him to run away, blasted his views of happiness, sunk him in the dust, and placed him in a degraded position from which he did not recover for five years. He tells the story of this terrible episode in what he calls the 'History of a Week'—from this story I can only give a brief summary:

His uncle had promised him a thrashing at night if he failed to perform a certain piece of work; he did fail through idleness—he confessed that he could have done it if he would. 'Then,' says he, 'I'll make you.' He took a birch broom handle and continued his blows so heavily and so long that the poor boy 'thought he would have broken him to pieces.' He was now drawing towards eighteen, and had become exceedingly sensitive to female criticism. The news of his thrashing had gone abroad, and a female acquaintance passing him next morning said, sneeringly, 'You were licked last night!' a remark which 'stung him to the quick.' He put on his hat as if going to meeting, slipped upstairs till the family were gone, he found ten shillings in a beaufet, he pocketed two shillings and seemed rather to pride himself on his honesty in not taking the whole.

'Figure to yourself,' says he, 'a lad of seventeen, not elegantly dressed, near five feet high, rather Dutch built, with a long narrow bag of brown leather that would hold a bushel in which was neatly packed up a new suit of clothes; also a white linen bag containing a sixpenny loaf of coarse blencorn bread, a bit of butter wrapped in the leaves of an old copy-book; a new Bible value 8s., one shirt, a pair of stockings, a sun dial, my best wig carefully folded and laid at top that it might not be crushed. The ends of the two bags being slung together over my left shoulder, my best hat hung to the button of my coat. I had only two shillings in my pocket, a spacious world before me, and no plan of operation.'

He cast back many a melancholy look, thinking he was taking an everlasting farewell of Nottingham; he had a heavy heart and a heavy load, and there was nothing light about him but the sun in the heavens and the money in his pocket. By ten o'clock he arrived at Derby, the inhabitants had gone to bed; he passed his father's door, which was open, he heard his father's footsteps not three yards away, and he retreated with precipitation. 'I was running,' he says, 'from the last hand that could have saved me!'

He took up his abode in an adjoining field on the cold grass with the sky overhead and the bags by his side. He rose at four, July 13, starved, sore, and started for Burton, where he arrived the same morning, having travelled 28 miles and spent nothing. 'I was an economist,' says he, 'from my cradle, and the character never forsook me.' He took a view of the town and spent one penny. The same evening he arrived near Lichtfield and prepared to lodge in a barn, but finding it closed he left his things and went on to another barn a stone's throw off which he found open, and returned after an absence of only a few minutes—what was his surprise! his bags had disappeared. He shouted, he roared after the rascal, but, says he, 'I might have been silent, for thieves seldom come at a call.' He ran raving about the road, told his loss to all he met, found pity from all, but redress from none! At eleven o'clock at night he found himself in the open street, 'left to tell his mournful tale to the silent night.' 'It is not easy,' he writes, 'to place a human being in a more distressed situation. My finances were nothing, a stranger to the world and the world to me; no employ, no food to eat or place to rest, I sought repose in the street upon a butcher's block.'

REPORT OF THE COUNCIL FOR 1900-1901.

Although the twelvemonth which has elapsed since the last General Meeting has been unrelieved by any such picturesque incident as the Publishers' Congress, which rendered the previous year eventful, it has nevertheless been full of interest and importance to the Trade.

The Trade Terms Agreement, which was the outcome of four years' anxious and careful deliberation on the part of this Association and of the Associations of Booksellers, only came into force on the 1st of January, 1900, and had consequently been working for not more than three months at the date of our last Report. The members of your Council were full of hope for the success of the scheme; they could not but feel, however, that it was more or less of an experiment, and that, notwithstanding the care which had been bestowed on the building of the engine designed to deliver the Trade from the old-established evils of undue competition in prices, some unexpected flaw might be discovered when it was once set to work. We are now happy to find ourselves in a position to say that after fifteen months' trial the Trade Terms Agreement has proved an unqualified success. Reports from the Booksellers' Associations in all parts of the kingdom assure us that there has been no difficulty in maintaining the prices of net books, and that satisfactory results of the net book system have already made themselves evident in the balance sheets of most retail booksellers. Many persons, whose opinions on such a subject are entitled to respect, have declared that, notwithstanding the war, which has necessarily had a bad effect on the sale of books, the retail book trade is at the present day on a more solid basis and in a more satisfactory condition than has been the case for many years.

To come to particulars, it is satisfactory to note that up to the present time it has not been necessary to bring the penal clauses of the Agreement into force in more than five cases. The only important firm of booksellers who at first refused to comply with the terms of the Agreement wrote voluntarily to the Council at the beginning of the present year to say that they had reconsidered the matter, and that in future they would discontinue their practice of selling net books at less than the published price.

Suggestions having been made that it would not be unreasonable to give some discount off net books supplied to such bodies as the Committees of the Public Libraries or Municipal Technical Schools, a conference was held in November last with representatives of the Booksellers' Associations. In view of their strongly expressed opinion on this point, it has been decided that no exceptions should be made to the rule that net books should be supplied to all purchasers, other than the Trade, at full price without discount.

In this connection your Council is glad to be able to report that, in consequence of representations made by booksellers wishing to tender for the supply of books for the Public Service, the Controller of His Majesty's Stationery Office has cancelled a clause in the forms of contract issued by his department which stipulated that a ten per cent. discount was to be allowed off books published at net prices.

Business of the Council.—Eleven Council Meetings have been held at Stationers' Hall during the past twelve months in addition to various meetings of Committees. At a special meeting of the Council, convened on the 1st of February, a loyal and dutiful address to His Majesty King Edward VII. was adopted, and was ordered to be forwarded to the Secretary of State for the Home Department for presentation to His Majesty. The following letter has since been received from the Home Secretary:—

HOME OFFICE, WHITEHALL:

February 27, 1901.

SIR,—I am commanded by the King to convey to you hereby His Majesty's thanks for the loyal and dutiful Resolutions of the Council of the Publishers' Association expressing sympathy on the occasion of the lamented death of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, and congratulation on His Majesty's Accession to the Throne.

I am, Sir,

CHAS. T. RITCHIE.

The President of
The Publishers' Association,
Stationers' Hall, E.C.

Arbitration.—No case has been submitted to the Council for arbitration during the past year.

A correspondence between one of our members and the editor of an important weekly paper, with reference to the conditions under which books were sent out for review, was brought before the Council, and, after some little trouble, what seemed likely to become a serious misunderstanding was, by the intervention of your Council, satisfactorily adjusted.

The Copyright Bill.—The members of the Publishers' Association will have noted with peculiar satisfaction that the Law of Copyright was mentioned in the King's speech as one of the subjects with which Parliament would be asked to deal. It is hoped that the Bill originally prepared by the Copyright Association, which passed the House of Lords in 1898, and, after being referred to a Select Committee of that House, was passed again in 1900, may now be brought forward as a Government measure.

Paris Exhibition.—The exhibit of books printed in the United Kingdom, which was organised by this Association for the Royal British Commission at the Paris Exhibition of 1900, was, owing to the limited space allotted, a comparatively small one. The standard of excellence was, however, very high, and the jury awarded to the exhibit a Grand Prix—the highest possible award. The expenses connected with this exhibit, with the exception of some very trifling ones, have been met by the Royal Commission, and have not fallen on this Association.

Increase of Members.—The number of members last year was 65; two withdrawals have taken place and five new firms have joined, so that the present membership is 68.

On behalf of the Council,

FREDERICK MACMILLAN.

President.

The President, in addressing the meeting, said: Gentlemen, it is my duty now to propose the adoption of the report which you have in your hands. It is a very small document, but I can assure you the contents of it represent a very good year's work. We do not give in our report any statistics as to the number of meetings attended by the various members of the Council, but I can assure you I never had to do with any committee which was so steadily and so well attended, and not only are there a large number of committee meetings, but there is a great deal of correspondence which takes place during the year. The report in your hands represents the work of the fifth year of the Publishers' Association, and I think we might congratulate ourselves very much that the Association has existed so long, and is in so good a condition. When it was started five years ago there were a good many people who could not help expressing their belief that, although it might be a very good thing to have a publishers' association, there was not much practical work to be done, and that any action with reference to the prices of books would undoubtedly, however well meant, prove abortive. We were told that the same kind of thing had been tried fifty years ago, and had failed utterly, and that undoubtedly was true. But the position of the public generally, and the general feeling with reference to associations, and with reference to co-operative action, has altered very much in the last fifty years, and in those days trades' unions were illegal combinations, and now of course, as you all know, they are perfectly legal. And I think there can be no doubt that associations which are formed for the purpose of benefiting the various trades are very much to the advantage of the public and to the trades with which they are connected. With reference to the abortive proceedings of forty or fifty years ago, there is one little point I may mention. You will observe in the treasurer's report, at the end of your reports, that there is an item of £25 which had been expended on a book of autographs. As this is a matter which will be sure to be questioned I may tell you that this £25 represents a very interesting memento we were able to purchase which came into our hands quite accidentally. It is a book of autograph letters received by Mr. J. W. Parker, a well-known publisher at the time the agitation took place, and it includes letters from Charles Dickens, John Stuart Mill, Herbert Spencer, Leigh Hunt, and a number of literary men of the day, with reference to the possibility of keeping up prices, and they, one and all, condemned it strongly. (Laughter.) As you know, the association of the time broke down. This book of autographs was offered to the Council by one of the family of the late Mr. Parker, and we thought it was so interesting and so much like our own work that it would be worth while to purchase it and put it into the archives of the Society. We therefore had it valued by a competent person, who said it was well worth £25, and we thought we were justified in spending that amount of money on it. The book is here, so that anyone can see it. It may be interesting perhaps to remark that the Americans have since last year formed a Publishers' Association, and also a Booksellers' Association, very much on the same lines as our own. Their book of rules is rather more elaborate than our own, but taking it all together, what they propose to do is very much founded on what we have done and what I think we have done fairly successfully. We may hope they will also be successful in what they are doing. (Hear, hear.) The German Association, of course, is a very old one, and there is the French Association. American books, however, are so much like our own that it is interesting to think they have paid us the compliment of practically imitating our Association and our rules. Of course the most interesting thing that has taken place during the year has been the putting into force of the trade terms agreement. When we met last year it had just been done, but it had only been going on for three months, and it was impossible to say then whether or not it had been successful. I think we may undoubtedly say at the present time that it has proved itself successful. (Hear, hear.) There has been little difficulty, and the few difficulties which have arisen have been cleared out of the way, and in point of fact I think we may regard the thing as an unqualified success. I think this is very much due to the lines on which we have gone, and I always regard it as most important that the system of publishing net books should be, so to speak, permissive—that is, there should be no hard or fast law laid down that a book shall be net, but that people, on the contrary, should be allowed to do as they like. This has had the effect of making it possible for nobody to object to the system and obliging them to try something in which they did not believe. If any author feels strongly that the net system is a mistake, he has only to say so, and anybody publishing for him would under ordinary circumstances meet him, and bring out his book as an ordinary book. Therefore, one of the great sources of difficulty is removed. That principle had never been adopted in the earlier Association, and therefore the authors were brought in, and it was through the action of the authors that the old plan broke down. An author now, if he has an objection, has but to express his objection, and the book is published in the ordinary way. As a matter of fact, my experience has been that authors have been on the whole a most reasonable body of men, and personally I have had no difficulty with any of the authors for whom I have the honour to publish. Talking about the German Association, as we all know, one of the most interesting things this year was a sort of New Year's present we received in the form of a letter from Messrs. Stoneham, who stated that they had given the matter full consideration, and had come to the conclusion that the principle to which they previously adhered of taking off discount from net books was not a satisfactory one, and for the future they would sell at full prices. This was very satisfactory, but the curious thing was that at the same time a circular came round to the members of the German Börsenverein saying that Messrs. Meyer & Müller, the great undersellers of Germany, had also concluded to come in, and that the embargo laid on the supply of books to them had been taken off. It was a curious beginning of the century, and a very interesting one for us. The only part of the net book question which has not yet been seriously attacked is as regards magazines. There is a very strong feeling amongst a great number of important booksellers that magazines should, if possible, be sold at the price at which they are published. As you all know, there has never been any discount taken off newspapers. The sixpenny newspapers, like the Graphic and the Illustrated London News, have always sold at 6d., but if the newspaper is half the size and is called a magazine and has a wrapper, then it is at once sold for 4½d. There seems no particular reason why it should be so. The fact that the illustrated newspapers sell at 6d. shows that the public will pay 6d. for them, and there is no doubt that the prices at which magazines sell now are not really worth the handling on the part of any bookseller. The carriage for the country booksellers is considerable, and there is really no profit on them. For this reason there has been a good deal said on the part of the booksellers as to the importance of extending the net system from books to magazines—a very important addition which, I think, ought to be very seriously considered and, if possible, carried out. From the first we have always felt it important not to act too quickly and not to take any step which had not been thoroughly considered. We have hitherto not done anything about it, and we have rather waited for the booksellers to formulate some plan of their own. It is important that they should all act together, and I think it most important that they should get the co-operation of some of the large magazine publishing houses, such as Messrs. Newnes, Messrs. Harmsworth, and so on, and I think that has not yet been arranged. For my own part I hope some action will be taken before long to bring magazines into line with books, and it will be much to the interest of everyone concerned when that is done. During the year, I may take this opportunity of reminding you, the fourth International Congress of Publishers is to be held at Leipzig. We have had many letters from Mr. Brockhaus, who is President of the Congress, expressing the hope that a number of our members will go there to attend the Congress. It will take place on Monday the 9th till Thursday the 12th of June, and they have sent a most attractive list of proceedings. Of course there are the meetings of the Congress, and reports, and things of that kind which it may be a little difficult for some of us to take part in, or else of our incapacity to talk German. I am ashamed myself to say I could not take part in any discussion. (Laughter.) But there is a good deal we shall be able to see, and there is a good deal which incapacity to talk German will not interfere with, although an incapacity to digest dinners may. (Laughter.) I see they are providing luncheons, dinners, and a closing banquet, and things of that kind form a very important part of the proceedings. I presume these will also be washed down by large libations of German beer warranted to contain no arsenic. (Laughter.) But seriously I hope a good number of our members will manage to go. Mr. Murray and Mr. Heinemann will go, and I myself think it both my pleasure and my duty to go, and I hope a number of our members will also make it a little holiday. One can get there in twenty-four hours. Mr. Fairholme, who acted as a most efficient secretary when we had the Congress here, is going over as a sort of secretary to the English Commission, and we shall get a good deal of assistance from him. I hope, as a compliment to our brother confrères, a number will go, and I am sure they will have a very pleasant little outing. If any gentleman will send his name to Mr. Poulten saying he will go I shall be rather glad, as I want to let Mr. Brockhaus know how many he may expect. There is also another little matter on May 10. There is to be a dinner of booksellers and publishers. The suggestion came from the Associated Booksellers' Society, who are very keen about it, and we thought it a very good thing to do. They wanted to have a dinner to celebrate the success of the net system; we had some very pleasant meetings of this kind two or three years ago, and I hope this one will be equally satisfactory. They have done me the honour of asking me to take the chair, and as President of this Association I could not very well refuse, although I would have been glad if some more eloquent chairman had been chosen. Mr. Kay, the President of the Booksellers' Association, is to occupy the vice-chair. I believe there will be a large number of booksellers from the country, and I hope a good number of the members of this Association will be present. I formally move the adoption of this report.

Mr. Houlston asked if the Chairman would explain the correspondence with relation to review copies, and let them know how it was decided.

The Chairman said one of their members sent the correspondence he had held with the editor of one of the most important of the weekly papers. This editor had written to the publisher to ask for a particular book which he wanted to review. It was a large and expensive book, and the publisher replied that he was unable to send it, as he could only send out a certain number of copies, and the paper in question was not amongst those he was sending to. The editor then wrote and said he hoped the publisher would send him no more books to review. Then the Association took the matter up, and remonstrated with the editor on the action he had taken, and the result was that the editor said he would receive the publisher's books, and the matter was settled satisfactorily.

Mr. G. Mills seconded the motion, and it was carried.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

On a vote being taken for the officers, Mr. F. Macmillan was re-elected President, Mr. John Murray Vice-President, and Mr. C. J. Longman Hon. Treasurer.

Mr. Longman proposed that Messrs. Warne and Hodder be re-elected Auditors, and this was seconded by Mr. G. T. Brown and carried.

The election for the Council resulted in the following being chosen:—

Messrs. George Bell & Sons	...	30	Votes
Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.	...	28	"
Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.	...	26	"
Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co.	...	24	"
Mr. William Heinemann	...	22	"
Messrs. W. Blackwood & Sons	...	23	"
Messrs. A. Black & Co.	...	20	"
Messrs. Cassell & Co.	...	15	"
Rivingtons	...	13	"

A tie took place for the last place, and after a re-vote Messrs. Chatto & Windus were elected.

Messrs. Moffatt & Paige, Limited, and Messrs. Morgan & Scott have been elected members of the Publishers' Association.

THE COUNCIL AND AFFIDAVITS.

Mr. Gill raised the question of members of the Council swearing affidavits and bringing in their official position as being on the Council of the Association. He stated that in a case in which his firm was the defendant the University authorities approached the Council asking that an affidavit might be sworn officially, but this the Council refused to do, and then several members of the Council swore affidavits. He moved: 'That the members of this Association are of opinion that the officers shall not in any affidavit or other legal document they may take or make, use or refer to their position as officers of this Association without in the first place consulting the Council.'

This found no seconder.

The Chairman said it was not a fact that the Council were approached by the Universities. The members of the Council did not make affidavits as such, but referred to the Association just as he might describe himself as a magistrate for Hertfordshire, which could in no way bind the Herts Quarter Sessions.

Mr. Gill said if the Universities did not approach the Council, the publishers in partnership with them did.

Mr. Clare said that was not so. He could speak absolutely on the point that no application of the kind was made to the Council of the Association.

The matter then dropped.

NET MAGAZINES.

Mr. F. J. Cross, speaking as representing one of the largest houses concerned in the publication of magazines, said there had been a growing desire on the part of publishers and booksellers to issue net magazines, but the great thing was to get unanimity amongst the publishers themselves. He knew that at the present moment steps were on foot for approaching the big magazine houses with a view of getting that unanimity, and he hoped that there would also be unanimity amongst the booksellers and agents. He hoped before long the matter would come before the Council with satisfactory results. Meanwhile he was pleased to see that the system of publishing magazines at net prices was growing, and he trusted would continue to grow.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman concluded the proceedings.

THE SIMPKIN MARSHALL CRICKET CLUB.

The Annual Bohemian Concert in connection with the above club was held on Saturday, March 23, at the 'Falstaff,' Eastcheap, the President, Mr. Joseph Shaylor, occupying the chair. The musical arrangements were under the able directorship of Messrs. E. T. Mawe and G. H. Rogers, and great credit is due to them for the brilliant array of talent arranged for the occasion. During the evening the prizes won last season were presented by the chairman. The first prize for batting was won by Mr. E. T. Mawe, the second place was given to Messrs. Purkiss and Channing, who each received a prize; Mr. Wiggins took the first prize for bowling, and Mr. Newman the second. Mr. Wiggins was also presented with the ball (with a silver inscription) used in the last match for the Second Division of the London Printing and Stationery Trades Cricket Association, which was won last year by this club. Mr. Wiggins on that occasion taking seven wickets for twenty runs. At the concert the ladies were well represented by Mesdames Maud Small, Nellie Letch, Florence Goddard (violin), and Madame Hettie Whyte, all of whom were well received, especially the two latter. The sentimental portion of the programme was in the able hands of Messrs. Bentley and F. W. Turbin, and the humorous element, which was a strong item, included the well-known names of Messrs. Ted Honeyman, Arthur Blount, Wilson Martell, Geo. Roberts, Geo. Read, and G. H. Rogers. Messrs. Graham and Russell earned great applause by their humorous duets, and Mr. Speaight had a good reception for his recitations. Mr. Will Cornish was great, as usual, on the silver bells. Mr. Finlay Dunn ably officiated at the piano, and so helped to make the concert a great success. A cordial vote of thanks to the chairman, moved by Mr. J. K. Ayling, brought a most successful evening to a close.

MR. WILLIAM WELCH, OF PORTSMOUTH.

BY ONE WHO KNEW HIM.

William Welch was born in the year 1821. After leaving school he was apprenticed to the engineering trade. During his apprenticeship and after, he was distinguished for the zeal he displayed in acquiring knowledge bearing upon his trade. There were no technical schools in those days, such as exist now in populous centres, and so the young enthusiast attracted to himself several other young men, and they banded themselves together in a little society for the purpose of mutual help and improvement, both in their trade and in general culture. As time rolled along their numbers grew, and many, if alive, could testify to the value of that society. By degrees the organisation began to broaden in its aims and became ambitious to act as a weapon of defence against the employers—a position with which Mr. Welch and several of the older members had no sympathy. His stock argument was: 'Let us make ourselves masters of our trade, and then there will be no fear of our masters taking advantage of us.'

THE LATE MR. WM. WELCH

But in time the child became too strong for the parents, and in the end it was finally absorbed in what is now known as one of the strongest trade unions in the world—the A.S.E., of which it may truly be said my dear old friend was one of the unwilling founders.

Over fifty years ago he left London and removed to Portsmouth to enter the dockyard, where he was struck with the lamentable lack of opportunity afforded the apprentices and younger workmen to improve themselves in their trade, and finally he decided to open a bookseller's shop for the supply of such works as would be useful to those engaged in the engineering trade. This was over forty years ago, and from then up to the day before he died he was always at his post, ready to give counsel to young students, and advise them what to read and study. His knowledge of technical literature was most profound—for he kept pace with the times, and though not at the bench for years could fully appreciate all the changes that had taken place.

Needless to say he had a marvellous memory. He could repeat pages, if not chapters, from the works of Tennyson, Ruskin, and especially Carlyle, of whom he was a great admirer and student, his favourite and oft-quoted passage being 'Know what thou canst work at, and work at it like a Hercules.'

Trained in a political school of sixty years ago, where Radicals were few and far between—when working men were not supposed to hold an opinion of their own, and had all their thinking done for them by their betters—he never lost that faculty of absolute independence of thought which was the keynote to his character all his life long. To-day he would be described as a Conservative Liberal. He had lived to see the political dreams of his youth become actualities, and so was in a measure satisfied.

But one thing did not satisfy him, and that was the present-day methods of dealing with the problem of poverty—especially the indifference of the churches—on which subject I have often heard him wax eloquent. Partly by way of protest, and partly out of pure sympathy, he became an unattached but valuable helper of the Salvation Army. Somewhere about a dozen slum workers and poor members belonging to that body he entertained every Sunday to tea in his own house for upwards of twenty years.

Now that he has 'crossed the bar,' there will be many a young student who will miss his kindly advice; many a traveller miss his lofty and intellectual conversation; and, most of all, his gifted daughters will miss his interminable efforts to brighten and enrich their lives. Quiet, unassuming and unostentatious as his life has been, he has left his mark upon the world. The one great fact he tried to impress upon one and all with whom he associated was the one great fact of his life—he did his best to 'live so as to leave the world a little better than he found it.'

THE NOVEL IN COURT.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE (KING'S BENCH DIVISION).

(Before Mr. Justice Darling, without a Jury.)

WHITE v. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE AND CO

This was an action by an author, Mr. Robert White, against Messrs. Constable, of Westminster, the well-known publishers, for damages for breach of a contract to publish a novel called 'The MacMahon; or, The Story of the Seven Johns,' by a certain date. The defendants said that the delay was the fault of the plaintiff himself. Their case was that the delay was caused by the plaintiff's negligently passing for press the title-page with the pseudonym 'Blayne,' and the cover with the pseudonym 'Blaney.' The pseudonym selected by the author was 'Owen Blayne,' 'Blayne' being the name of a Welsh family who had settled in Ulster and given their name to the town of Castleblayne. The defendants also said that delay was caused by the fact that the use of dialect in the book required the type to include an unusually large number of certain letters. Owing to the fact of the letter 'A' being used so frequently, the printer had to resort to the type-founder for extra supply.

Mr. Marshall-Hall, K.C., and Mr. H. H. Lawless were for the plaintiff; Mr. Hammond-Chambers, K.C., and Mr. W. Whately for the defendants.

The cause was first heard on Friday, March 8, when a special jury was sworn, but, upon counsel for the plaintiff stating that the case was an important one and would occupy the court for some time, it was agreed to dismiss the jury and leave the issue to the learned judge. The case came on on March 22, and occupied the whole day.

Mr. John Murray, the publisher, was examined by Mr. Marshall-Hall upon an interview he had given to a daily paper. He stated that before Easter was a good time to publish books, because then they came out in time for the reviews, but postponement of publication till after Easter had a detrimental effect. He held that a book would be seriously damaged if publication were postponed from March 20 to April 20. Cross-examined, he admitted that in the case of a book the total sales of which had not amounted to 100 copies the damage through delay of a month at that time of year would not have amounted to anything like the difference between 100 and 1,500 copies.

Mr. Robert White, of Slane Cottage, Cowley Road, Oxford, the plaintiff, said that he was formerly a leader-writer and a writer of articles for the reviews, and that he was an Irishman by birth, but his sympathies were not Irish. In 1897 he had written an historical novel called 'The MacMahon,' and was desirous of publishing it. In February 1898 he put himself in communication with the defendants, and at an interview with Mr. Doubleday, of the defendant firm, he stipulated that it should be published by the middle of March. He wanted it to be out in time for the spring publishing season, and he also wanted it published by the Irish national holiday, as he thought this might help it to attract attention.

The Judge.—What is the Irish national holiday?

Mr. Lawless.—St. Patrick's Day, my Lord. That is March 17.

The Judge.—Is it only one day?

Mr. Lawless.—That is all, my Lord.

The witness said that a contract was entered into providing for the publication of the book by March 20, as he had not been particular to a day or two. It was not published at the proper time. The spring publishing season was very short. The book was not published till April 18. The war between America and Spain broke out on April 22 and filled the newspapers, and his book was not reviewed by any London daily paper till August. He had sent a copy to President McKinley. There was in the book a character called McKinley, belonging to a Scotch family settled in Ulster. Three-fourths of the American Presidents were descended from Ulster families. The book was directed against religious bigotry on both sides. He thought it would interest those who kept St. Patrick's Day.

The Judge.—Do the Irish spend St. Patrick's Day in reading? (Laughter.)

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—I'm afraid they would not be able to read the next day, my Lord. (Renewed laughter.)

Another delay was caused owing to the author's peculiar habit of spelling his pseudonym two ways. It was not discovered until early copies of the book had been delivered to the publishers and was about to be subscribed that the fact became evident. The publishers, on communicating with the author by way of satisfaction as to which was the proper spelling, received the somewhat characteristic reply from him: 'Anybody ought to know that there was only one way of spelling "Blayney," and that was the Irish way.' Upon the publishers referring to the specimen cover which had been submitted to the author for his approval, it was found that the author had written in pencil on the cover: 'This is the cover selected, Owen

Blaney.' The publisher at this, having to decide for himself, concluded that it should be 'Blayney,' and forthwith proceeded to have the spelling on the cover rectified.

The witness stated that he had never seen the name Blayney spelt without the first 'y,' and swore that he had never written it so. Counsel for the defendants in cross-examination produced the binder's approved specimen case, with the author's name stamped 'Owen Blaney,' and signed on the back in pencil, 'Approved, Owen Blaney.' Asked if that was his handwriting, witness said it was, and that he must have made a mistake.

It was evident from the two witnesses now called that the plaintiff had sought and found bad advice from some other London publisher.

Mr. S. Schofield said he was a gold-blocker, carrying on business in Farringdon Street. He stated that he could rectify the mistake of spelling on the 500 covers in one day. In cross-examination, however, it appeared that he referred only to the actual time the operation would take when everything had been prepared for him and a proof passed.

Mr. B. Clapham stated that it would only take half an hour to cast fresh type, and that and an early bound copy sent to the author, it appeared that in giving instructions for the binding the author had made a mistake in the spelling of his pseudonym. Further delay occurred through that; then came the Easter holidays, and the book was not published until April 18. The book was not a success. Of novels of merit by unknown authors about 6 or 7 in ten succeeded.

The Judge.—And in the case of known authors it makes no difference whether they have any merit or not?

The witness.—That is so, my Lord. (Laughter.)

The witness further said that the publication of the book had cost his firm more than the £110 they had received from the plaintiff.

Mr. J. Shaylor stated that he was one of the managing directors of Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd., wholesale booksellers and publishers. He stated that in the case of an historical novel like 'The MacMahon,' dealing with events of 200 years ago, it would make no difference whether publication took place on March 20 or April 20. Of novels of merit by unknown authors scarcely one in a hundred succeeded. The witness was then cross-examined by Mr. Marshall-Hall upon an article he had contributed to the Nineteenth Century.

Counsel.—It's rather long. (Witness's face fell.)

Counsel.—But extremely interesting. (Witness bowed and smiled.)

Mr. T. A. Cook stated that in 1898 he was editor of the St. James's Gazette. In describing the system of sending out books for review, he was stopped by the Judge.

The Judge.—When you became editor of the St. James's Gazette did you in any way alter the existing system?

Witness.—No, my Lord.

The Judge.—Then you need not explain. I know it; I was there. (Laughter.)

Witness further stated that, as editor, the only point he considered when sending books for review was their providing matters of interest for his readers.

Mr. Frederick Macmillan stated that he was a managing director of Macmillan & Co., Ltd. He confirmed Mr. Shaylor's evidence as to publication upon March 20 or April 20 being of no importance to an historical novel dealing with Irish history 200 years ago. He had heard Mr. John Murray's evidence; that gentleman was an eminent publisher, but would probably be the first to admit that he was not an authority upon the publication of novels. Witness thought he had not published any.

Counsel.—'The Love Letters of an Englishwoman'? (Laughter.)

Mr. Hammond-Chambers.—That, my Lord, is stated to be fact.

The Judge.—Then it is very strange fact.

Mr. Denny, bookseller in the Strand and Whitehall, and Mr. Tate, another bookseller, confirmed the evidence of the last witness as to a delay of a month not affecting the ultimate sales of a novel like 'The MacMahon.'

Mr. Tate said, in reply to Mr. Marshall-Hall, that if war broke out between England and some other country a month's delay might make a difference in the sale of a book.

The Judge.—Unless you sent it out as a comfort to the troops. (Laughter.) Do you

AN IRISH READING PARTY ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY

(Mr. Justice Darling: Do the Irish spend St. Patrick's Day in reading?)

there was nothing special about the type of this book.

In cross-examination he admitted that he was only in a small way of business, but he had worked as a journeyman with several large firms before starting for himself.

This concluded the case for the plaintiff.

Mr. H. Arthur Doubleday stated that he was a member of the defendant firm, Archibald Constable & Co. He remembered the plaintiff calling upon him early in 1898 about his book. He considered the book a clever one, but he thought that the Ulster dialect in which it was written would scarcely be appreciated by the public, and he recommended the author to modify it. Ultimately he agreed to publish the book, upon the author paying £110 towards the cost of producing 1,500 copies, the author to receive a royalty upon all copies sold. His firm did all in their power to get the book out by March 20; the printing, however, was delayed by the peculiar dialect employing an unusually large number of capital A's, which the printers could not obtain, the type being a peculiar one for which there was but a small demand. The author, himself, selected the type to be used. When at the end of March the book was printed, think, if there had been a total eclipse of the moon, it would have affected the sale?

Witness.—No.

The Judge.—No more than the Spanish-American war?

Witness.—No.

The Judge.—You put them on the same plane?

Witness.—Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Bumpus, bookseller, gave corroborative evidence.

During the examination of one of the witnesses the word 'curious' was dropped in its ordinary sense.

The Judge.—Ah! Stop one minute. We must inquire into this. I believe, Mr. Marshall-Hall, there is some technical meaning attached to the word 'curious' in the book trade?

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—That is so, my Lord.

Mr. Hammond-Chambers.—That is in the second-hand bookselling trade, my Lord.

The Judge.—Just so; I have seen it in catalogues, and from the titles and descriptions of the books I gather that the technical meaning would be defined here as within Lord Campbell's Act. (Loud laughter.)

His Lordship was assured that 'The MacMahon' was not 'curious' in that sense.

Mr. Jackson, the late traveller, was then called.

This witness seemed to affect the Judge and Court somewhat by his manner of responding to the questions put to him. To some he would reply in a most serious and accentuated voice, while to others put to him by Mr. Marshall-Hall his smile would assume most abnormal proportions.

Mr. Jackson stated that after subscribing the book in town twice—once by itself, and again in company with Mr. George Meredith's 'Essay on Comedy,' new edition, which had been raised in price to 6s., hoping by this to be able to induce his customers to sort up into a number—the only response he had was from one customer:—'Mr. Jackson, are you the author, or are you the MacMahon? If you are one of "The Seven Johns," I'll take seven as six and a half.' When asked by counsel for the defence if he had subscribed the book, he replied, 'Yes. I also carried the book to Bedford, Oxford, Cambridge and Birmingham in May, and in the following July to all the principal northern towns, and by using all the gentle persuasion in my power I found that I had been clever enough to sell two copies—one in Glasgow and the other in Manchester.'

Mr. Marshall Hall.—Have you read the book?

Witness.—Yes, partly.

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—Only partly; why didn't you finish it?

Witness.—I read sufficient to form an opinion of the book.

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—Was it a good opinion?

Witness.—No; the dialect worried me.

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—You mean that the book was quite above you?

Witness.—Yes, yes; (and emphatically) oh, yes.

Upon being asked by the Judge his opinion of the reason that the book did not sell, witness replied that he was afraid that both his customers and the public had failed to grasp the gentleman's genius.

To a remark by Mr. Marshall-Hall to the effect that his not liking the book was the cause of his not selling more copies, the witness here, drawing himself up to his full height, preliminary to his resting his elbows on the witness box, relaxed his features into a smile before replying as follows:—'Sir, we of the book trade, when exposing our wares for sale, are not in the habit of crying "stinking fish."' (Laughter.)

In answer to the Judge's question as to how his customers received the book, he replied,

My Lord, they seemed, one and all, to receive it as a horse would a thistle in his nosebag.' (Laughter.)

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—What does a horse do, Mr. Jackson?

Witness.—He shakes his head and snorts. (Laughter.)

Mr. Marshall-Hall (unguardedly).—I suppose donkeys do the same thing?

Witness (with a pitiful look at counsel) made no reply.

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—Do you remember a book, by Miss Forbes-Robertson, called 'The Potentate'?

Witness.—I do; I read it and subscribed it. Were you more successful with that than 'The MacMahon'?

Witness.—A trifle more so, for the simple reason that I had more to conjure with, the name of Forbes-Robertson being that of a very gifted family, as compared with the author of 'The MacMahon,' whose name was unknown.

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—Is the sale of books good in March?

Witness.—Well, for theology it is pretty good.

Judge.—Why theology?

Witness.—Lent, my Lord. (Laughter.) I thought that, for that novel, after Easter would be a better time.

Mr. Marshall-Hall.—I suppose that is a better time for novels that do for light reading for people sitting out at the seaside?

Witness.—Oh, yes.

This witness, in further reply to a question from the Judge, stated that the greatest order he received for the book was from Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, who, out of charity, gave him an order for thirteen copies after Mudie's Library had flatly refused it.

The Judge.—Tell me, Mr. Jackson, what did Mudie's Library say when they refused it?

Witness.—My Lord, the gentleman said, 'Good morning, Mr. Jackson.' (Laughter.)

Thank you, Mr. Jackson. That is all.

Mr. Bishop was then called.

Mr. Bishop, who had travelled with the book in Ireland for the defendants, said that he could not sell a single copy.

Mr. Whately.—Is Ireland a good book-buying country?—No.

To what do you attribute that?—Well, we hear it is a distressful country. (Laughter.)

The Judge.—Oh, but now the rents have been reduced. (Laughter.)

Witness.—Dublin is the only town that buys books.

The Judge.—That will be a good reason for reducing the rents again.

Mr. Thomas Leighton said he was a member of the firm of Leighton, Son & Hodge, wholesale bookbinders. He bound 'The MacMahon' for the defendants. On March 18 he had all the covers ready for use, and if the sheets had arrived the book could have been published on March 20. He received some early copies on March 31 and delivered them to the publishers the same day. On April 2 witness first learned of the mistake the author had made in the spelling of his pseudonym. The interval between April 2 and April 7 was occupied by correcting the brass block and altering one case, which was sent by witness's firm to the publishers for approval, by them to the author, and from the author back to the publishers, who returned it approved on April 7, witness receiving it on April 13 upon opening again after Easter. The books were ready for publication, so far as witness was concerned, on April 15.

Mr. Tanner said he was a member of the firm of Butler & Tanner, printers, Froms. He said the type used in printing 'The MacMahon' was a peculiar one, known as the Dryden type, and that only one firm made it. The book would require an unusual quantity of certain letters, and if they were not in stock the printer would probably have to wait some time for them. Witness had waited five weeks for type on a similar occasion. Only two firms of printers employed the Dryden type, so the typefounders would probably not keep any large stock of it.

This concluded the case for the defendants.

Mr. Justice Darling, in giving judgment, said that the case was rather an unusual one for that Court. The defendants admitted that there had been a technical breach of contract, and he had to decide how much damages the plaintiff had suffered thereby. For some of the delay Messrs. Constable were responsible, but for the other part the plaintiff was responsible. Such part of the delay as was due to the mistakes made by the plaintiff in the spelling of the name 'Blayney' on the binding, the plaintiff was responsible for. Therefore he could recover no damages for the delay so caused. As to the rest, it was caused by the practical difficulty in printing dialect by reason of the fact that an excess of certain vowels was required. The defendants should have seen to this, and the plaintiff was entitled to some damages in respect of their not doing so. But the plaintiff had not absolutely lost the remunerative season. The earlier publication did not make the difference between reputation as an author and no reputation. The defendants had pushed the book as well as they could. He fixed the damages for the delay caused by the defendants at £5. As they had paid £20 into Court, there would be judgment for the defendants with costs, £15 to be returned to them.

CHARLES BUCKLAND.

The PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has always regarded it as part of its duty to the trade to place on record the demise of any members thereof who, during their lifetime, have won for themselves the esteem and respect of their brethren. We are enabled to-day to give the portraits of two men whose venerable aspects, almost without words, betoken the goodness and uprightness of their characters. That of Mr. Welch, of Lundport, looks like one of the ancient philosophers, while that of Charles Buckland betrays the warm-hearted geniality and bright and happy intelligence which characterised him. The following obituary notice of him appeared in the Times, which we gladly give as a mark of high esteem from an outside source.

'Mr. Charles Buckland, one of the partners in the firm of Messrs. Henry Sotheran & Co., who died on the 16th inst. from influenza and pneumonia, in the sixty-ninth year of his age, at his residence in Clapham Old Town, and who was buried at Norwood Cemetery on Thursday, enjoyed a singularly wide reputation among book-buyers at home and abroad. He began his connection with Messrs. Sotheran at the Piazza, Covent Garden. After a few years there he was placed in joint charge of the branch at 42 Charing Cross; and later still he was promoted to the sole control of the "Book Court" in the Crystal Palace, occupied by the firm during Sir George Grove's management of the Crystal Palace Company. Finally, when the firm, in 1871, established their West-end branch in Piccadilly, he was entrusted with its management, which he continued to the end of his life, having in the meanwhile become a partner with Mr. Cecil Sotheran and Mr. Railton, on the retirement of Mr. Henry Sotheran from active business. He was by nature a man of singular refinement and elevation of character, and of an unfailing courtesy that came direct from the heart and was extended to all alike. Born in Westminster, he was educated partly at the National School there, and at the Sunday school of St. Margaret's he had for his teacher and afterwards life-long friend, the late Lord Hatherly when Mr. Page Wood. He came also much under the influence of a young and well-known Westminster clergyman of those days, Mr. Borradaile. Mr. Buckland leaves a widow, and one son in the service of the firm.

The present writer is one of the rapidly decreasing number who remember the old house of Sotheran & Son in Great Tower Street, and the time when the firm became Willis & Sotheran in the Piazza, Covent Garden, and probably may have met Mr. Buckland there when he was quite a youth. Now, though not to be regarded as an old man at sixty-nine, he has finished his course on earth, and has left behind him a name and a character worthy of all imitation. He has also left behind him the venerable head of the firm, many years his senior, Mr. Henry Sotheran, whose father the writer remembers well.

Mr. Buckland was very much interested in the Booksellers' Provident Institution, and for many years was a constant attendant at its meetings, where of course he came in contact with many members of the trade, who sat there from year to year. The present writer cannot claim to have known him very intimately, but he always struck him as bubbling over with jovial good humour, happiness, and kindness of heart. He was a man of much refinement of taste and of excellent judgment and knowledge in his business. One would suppose that he was just one of those men who must have made a host of friends and who could not possibly have made any enemies.

IN MEMORIAM.

MR. JOHN HEATON.

Another character familiar to the last generation of publishers has recently passed away in the person of Mr. John Heaton, for many years trade manager for Messrs. Geo. Routledge & Sons, Broadway, Ludgate Hill. He first engaged with that firm in 1848, then carried on by Mr. Geo. Routledge in Soho Square, and continued with them for forty-eight years, during which period he compiled in his spare time the popular Ready Reckoners which still bear his name, besides editing and revising several other works. He retired into private life in 1896, occupying his leisure in compiling a very useful set of Interest Tables. Death closed a useful unostentatious life at the ripe old age of 83.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Harrow,' by J. Fischer Williams, M.A. Old Harrovians will heartily enjoy this account of an institution which holds so many happy memories for them, nor will those whose connection with the school is of a more impersonal character be less interested. Mr. Fischer Williams has performed his task well. Prefacing his more direct labours with some well-balanced remarks on the work of a public school generally, he next proceeds to describe the early history of Harrow, the foundation of the school, its buildings and estate, constitution and daily routine, out-door life and games, festivals, and so forth. Finally in various appendices there is given much interesting information in regard to the ancient Charter, Lyon's endowments, tables of work at different periods, and special bills, and the book is brought to a conclusion with a carefully prepared index. The illustrations, of which there are a large number, mostly taken from photographs, naturally form a conspicuous attraction of the volume, and they include several of exceptional interest, as depicting the old-time appearance of the school. The book in its entirety is a valuable addition to the series of 'Handbooks to the Great Public Schools,' organised by the publishers.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Robert Louis Stevenson: a Life Study in Criticism,' by F. Bellyse Baildon. 'So much has been written about Robert Louis Stevenson, and much of it is so excellently well done, that it may seem officious to add a stone to the growing cairn.' Thus writes the author of the book before us. 'But,' he goes on to say, 'the present writer has one advantage even over Professor Colvin, in that he knew Stevenson years before the editor of the "Letters" was aware of his existence.' Then he proceeds still further to justify the existence of this life study by showing how it grew on his hands out of various brief notices and series of articles which he was from time to time asked to write for various English and German periodicals and newspapers. To all these materials he has added two chapters on Stevenson as a letter writer, and a final chapter headed 'Conclusions.' 'Whether in all this there is anything novel or of value (he adds), the just and gentle reader and the discerning critic must decide for themselves.' While we are free to confess that we are not enamoured of books about books and their authors, nevertheless, as the public taste at the present day seems to affect such publications, no apology for their production appears to be needed; and, for ourselves, can add that we have in this handsome volume found much that to us is new and extremely interesting. Mr. Baildon's work, which is clearly a labour of love, is supplemented by a very complete bibliography and provided with a good index, besides being embellished with two excellent portraits, and ought to be welcomed by admirers of the amiable writer to whose memory it is a deserved tribute.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Correspondence College Press).—'The Matriculation History of England,' by C. S. Fearenside, M.A. That a second edition of this work should have been called for is a gratifying tribute to the perception of the student class in this country. The book, as we pointed out on its first issue, is well prepared, concise in its main outlines, and, above everything, thoroughly practical.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Essays,' by Ralph Waldo Emerson, 'Essays,' second series; and 'Nature,' by the same. Edited by Walter Jerrold. The above form two volumes of the carefully edited and admirably printed

'Temple Classics' series, which seems to supply all reasonable requirements of such readers as wish to possess a handy and uniform edition of their favourite classic writers. Of Emerson's Essays what need be said nowadays of books which ought to be possessed and read by everyone; not only because their author was a master of English, but also because he had a message to deliver which it imports every man to know. For instance, 'Self-Reliance,' one of the first series of Essays, if read, pondered, and acted upon, may be worth to a young man incaleculably more than the price of these two volumes. Mr. Walter Jerrold has well performed his editorial duties, and in his marginalia gives a syllabus of the text page by page and has added useful elucidatory notes. He has also reproduced in its entirety Thomas Carlyle's appreciative 'Preface by the English Editor' to the first series at the end of the volume; and has also appended to the second series Carlyle's 'Notice' which was prefixed to the English edition of the second series and advertised by the American publisher as 'A Preface by Thomas Carlyle.' This statement called forth an indignant disclaimer from the Seer of Chelsea, who wrote to Emerson: 'My preface consists only of a certificate that the book is correctly printed and sent forth by a publisher of your appointment.' We warmly commend this capital reprint of a literary masterpiece.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'As the Twig is Bent,' by Lucas Cleeve. The power of love is no doubt very great, but we may question whether it is quite capable of transforming a thoroughly unscrupulous scoundrel, whose habits have been cultivated from an early age amid congenial surroundings, into a model of virtue and sublime rectitude. Such, however, is the change that George Bowman undergoes in this story. At the beginning of the narrative about as sharp and unprincipled a young scamp as ever walked the London streets, we find him later on a victim to the qualms of conscience, and anxious to restore to his simple-minded dupes the money he has swindled them out of in connection with the 'Wheal Anne' mine. All this is due to his affection for the upright, beautiful Angela Browne. Of course it is quite in accordance with poetic justice that as soon as he has fallen in love with Angela stern Nemesis should punish him for his previous evil-doing by disclosing that old Mr. Browne is one of the unfortunate beings he has defrauded. Whether matters ever come straight we are not going to tell, but it is certainly fortunate for Bowman when he renounces his ill-gotten gains that he should have a magnificent voice to fall back upon for support. The story, though we may cavil at its main sentiment, is written in the author's best vein, and will prove a most engaging companion.

From Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—'Celestial Motions: a Handy Book of Astronomy,' by William Thynne Lynn, B.A., F.R.A.S. Tenth edition. It is refreshing to read on the title-page of this excellent treatise on Astronomy the words 'Tenth Edition,' in these days when so many persons devote their time to sports or money-making, taking far more interest in cycles for road or racing than in the meteoric cycle, and in autocars than in the proper motions of stars, and to whom Stock Exchange 'bears' are of far more importance than Ursa Major. As we thankfully welcome this new edition of so useful a guide to the study of the heavenly bodies we unhesitatingly recommend it to all. For there are few if any of the sciences the study of which is more ennobling and elevating than Astronomy. This new edition has been thoroughly revised.

From the same.—'Remarkable Comets,' by W. T. Lynn. Ninth edition, revised. We are glad to see that this extremely interesting history of remarkable comets has reached its ninth edition. It has been brought up to date.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Improved Means of Locomotion as a First Step towards the Cure of the Housing Difficulties of London: being an Abstract of the Proceedings of Two Conferences convened by the Warden of Robert Browning Hall, Walworth, with a Paper on the Subject by Charles Booth.' The question of the housing of the people in London forms one of the most important problems of the day, and in its solution the increasing facility of the means of communication occupies no insignificant place. Mr. Charles Booth, well known for his efforts in the cause of philanthropy, discusses the subject to excellent purpose, and we are glad that his paper has been printed.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Body of Christ,' by Charles Gore, M.A., D.D. This inquiry into the institution and doctrine of the Holy Eucharist was (the author tells us) first announced under the title of 'The Breaking of the Bread,' but as it appeared that this title was already appropriated 'The Body of Christ' was chosen as expressing two most important aspects of Eucharistic truth. 'It expresses the nature of the gift presented to us in the Sacrament (Corpus Christi), and also the nature of the holy society of which it is the spiritual nourishment, and of which it is written "Ye are the Body of Christ."' The author also says that this book is in part the result of an attempt to clear up his own thoughts on Eucharistic subjects in view of the Round Table Conference to which he had been summoned by the late regretted Bishop Creighton, and that his prayer in sending it out is 'that it may serve in some measure the object of that Conference—the promotion of mutual understanding and unity among Christians.' Having perused, with no small advantage to ourselves we trust, this book on a subject of such stupendous importance to all who profess and call themselves Christians, we venture to say that it is strikingly manifest no pains have been spared by the author to remove all stumbling blocks from the way of those who would rightly understand and use the Christian Sacrament, and would join in his prayer, as all earnest communicants must, for a good understanding and unity among Christians. The work itself, which could not have appeared at a more appropriate season of the Church than this of Lent, is thoroughly catholic in the true sense of that word, for it contains opinions of writers in all ages and branches of the Church universal, and its style is as bright and lucid as a book planned and written in a spirit so charitable and conciliatory is like to be.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Huldreich Zwingli: the Reformer of German Switzerland, 1484-1531,' by Samuel Macauley Jackson. Probably few men are less known among the many pioneers of progress than Huldreich Zwingli. Yet his life is most interesting. The author of the present volume has evidently taken great pains by investigation of the best authorities to render the work thoroughly satisfactory. He tells us of Zwingli's early years, his life at Glarus, Einsiedeln, and Zurich, the part he took in the Reformation, his public marriage, the great success attending his preaching, and the political activity that distinguished the later part of his career. The volume is a worthy addition to the 'Heroes of the Reformation' series, of which Professor Jackson is the general editor. It is illustrated with several reproductions from photographs and old prints.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'British Power and Thought: a Historical Inquiry,' by the Hon. Albert S. G. Canning. We have before had occasion in these columns to speak of the author's wide research and literary acquaintanceship. In his present volume he traces the influence of thought on British power, exhibiting to excellent purpose his intimate knowledge of Milton, Gibbon, Hume, Shakespeare, Dryden, Dr. Johnson, Scott, Byron, Macaulay, Dickens, and the many other writers who have moulded public opinion in this country. To the result of wide reading Mr. Canning adds a pleasant scholarly style and sound judgment. His remarks on Scott and Dickens are especially interesting. Speaking of 'Oliver Twist,' he points out that 'the most villainous, odious, and depraved people are fairly shown without the least disguise, yet their characters and lives are made in every sense thoroughly repulsive instead of alluring.' The statement that, with the exception of Dickens, 'no British novelist has described English and Scottish thieves and villains with more thorough exactness than Scott' seems a little startling, for somehow one is not in the habit of associating the 'Wizard of the North' with the special delineation of vice, though very slight reflection will recall a brilliant array of scoundrelism—Master Richard Varney, Tony Foster, Rashleigh Osbaldistone, Trapbois the Miser, Dick Hatterick, Lord Dalgarno, Nanty Ewart, and others to boot. Still they are hardly of the same class as Bill Sykes, Fagin the Jew, and the Artful Dodger, while in many of Scott's novels villainy is almost entirely unrepresented. There is much in Mr. Canning's work that will appeal to the thoughtful reader, and he has throughout treated an interesting subject with excellent discernment and great impartiality.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Mayor of Littlejo: being a Faithful Narrative of the Strange Experiences which befell Mr. Josiah Pettigrew, Mayor of Littlejo, during his term of office,' by Fred. C. Smale. This is a piece of amusing extravagance something after the Anstey pattern, though not possessing the subtle humour and literary skill of the author of 'Vice-Versa.' But the difficulties into which the worthy Josiah Pettigrew is plunged by the appearance in his family household of his fairy great-great-grandmother are comical enough in all conscience, and the fun becomes still more furious when he possesses on his own account the gift of invisibility, with other strange properties. Where the author falls short is in the power of humorous dialogue; his characters are not distinctly outlined (except in description) and there is little of the deeper ludicrous effect which would arise from two persons of marked individuality thrown together in a grotesque situation. The book has more the style of mechanical farce, relying on secret cupboards and revolving doors, than of true comedy, no matter how absurd. But it is a thoroughly laughable work nevertheless, and the illustrations of Will Owen add additional zest to the text.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Midnight Passenger,' by Richard Henry Savage. A not very savoury story of New York life, the characters being for the most part of a thoroughly disreputable order, while their actions are described by the author in slangy language that does nothing to improve the tone of the book. The hero Randall Clayton is a young man holding an important position in the office of the Western Trading Company. He is marked down as prey by a number of unscrupulous scoundrels. Their first step is to throw a beautiful woman in his path, and the move is at once successful. Clayton's chief enemy is a German named Fritz Braun, the proprietor of a pharmacy on Sixth Avenue, where a number of strange medicines known as 'knock-out-drops,' 'spiritual comforts,' 'medicinal cognac,' and so forth, are sold. In the evenings he presides over an establishment of a still more disreputable character. The story goes to show how this man, aided by spies and other accomplices, manages to get the unfortunate clerk thoroughly into his power, and, by using the woman as a bait, eventually robs him of nearly 250,000 dollars, which he should have paid into the bank. In the long run, of course, retribution comes to the villain, but how this is meted out it would scarcely be fair to tell. The story is particularly rich in strongly marked characters of the sharp, unscrupulous type, and long before the conclusion is reached we fancy most readers will be completely nauseated with the details of low-class crime.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.

The Sun Eclipse of May 18, 1901, to be the Longest ever Known

* Total eclipses of the Sun, always occasions for stir in the astronomical world, have now-a-days hardly less interest to people in general, though in a different way.

* The present volume is not written for astronomers, much less for eclipse experts, but to give very unprofessional information to those without technical knowledge who are yet curious as to these strangely impressive phenomena—and with the hope, too, of creating further intelligent interest.*

MANUEL DE BIBLIOGRAPHIE HISTORIQUE. Par M. CH.-V. LANGLOIS. Nouvelle édition entièrement refondue. PREMIER FASCICULE. Un volume petit in-8°, broché, 4 fr.

M. Langlois a publié en 1896 la Première Partie de son Manuel de Bibliographie Historique, intitulée : Instructions bibliographiques.

D'cet ouvrage, qui a été très bien accueilli, deux tirages ont été rapidement épuisés.

L'auteur se propose de publier maintenant l'ensemble de son Manuel, en deux fascicules.

Le premier fascicule, actuellement mis en vente, contient une nouvelle édition, refondue, de la 'Première Partie' publiée en 1896 ; elle est sensiblement plus longue que la première : de nombreuses additions ont été nécessaires soit pour réparer des omissions, soit pour donner l'ampleur convenable à des développements trop sommairement esquissés, soit enfin pour tenir compte des progrès très remarquables de la littérature bibliographique entre 1896 et 1900. Le fascicule mis en vente contient en outre le Chapitre préliminaire de la 'Seconde Partie', où le plan de cette Seconde Partie est exposé.

Le deuxième fascicule, qui sera mis très prochainement sous presse contiendra la fin de la Seconde Partie et un Index général.

The

Publishers' Weekly

Established in 1872, with which was incorporated the American Literary Gazette and Publishers' Circular (established in 1852), is recognised as the independent representative of the publishing and bookselling interests in the United States.

The central feature of the paper, that makes it an indispensable aid to the book trade, to libraries, and to literary people, is its Bibliographical Department. Every possible facility of reference is afforded by a combination of methods which records the books by the week, the month, the season, and the year, under the author, the publisher, the title, the subject, and the class.

The Literary Department includes comprehensive intelligence as to books forthcoming and publishing movements at home and abroad, editorial discussions on book and trade subjects, original contributions, notes on catalogues, notes on auction sales, journalistic notes, business notes, literary and trade notes, &c.

A minor, but practical and convenient, feature is the 'Books Wanted' column, giving subscribers an opportunity, under the most favourable circumstances, to search for books which may be out of print or unobtainable through the regular channels.

Subscribe on price, postage prepaid, $4 a year. Advertising rates on application.

From the same office are published: 'The American Catalogue,' 'The Publishers' Trade List Annual,' 'The American Educational Catalogue,' 'The Annual Literary Index,' The Library Journal, Literary News, and other bibliographical aids. Send for Booklet.

The Times History of The War in South Africa 1899–1901

Edited by L. S. AMERY, Fellow of All Souls, Oxford

In either 5 or 6 royal 8vo. volumes, cloth extra, about 400 pages. Fully Illustrated with Photogravure and other Portraits of Prominent Military and Civil Personages connected with the War on both sides; also with the latest Maps and Battle Plans, and a specially prepared general Map of South Africa.

THE FIRST LARGE EDITION having been exhausted, a SECOND EDITION has been prepared and is NOW READY

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Publishers cannot undertake to receive orders at the present price of £3. 3s. net the set of 5 or 6 vols. after May 1, 1901, as the price of the work may then be raised considerably.

Unforeseen Prolongation of the War

Owing to the delay in the publication of important official despatches relating to earlier operations, and to the unforeseen prolongation of the War, which has made it impossible to refer many highly controversial points to the officers principally concerned, it has been found necessary to defer somewhat the issue of the volumes of THE TIMES' 'History of the War in South Africa.' The object of the Publishers has been to present to the public at the earliest possible moment a standard work of permanent value such as usually only appears many years after, when the subject has lost much of its interest; and every endeavour will be made to secure speedy publication consistent with keeping up to the high level already attained in the first volume.

A Note respecting Vol. II.

It is hoped that the second volume, covering operations down to the end of December 1899, will be in the hands of subscribers early in the Spring. It will give a full account of military operations from the declaration of war on October 11, 1899, beginning with the Boer invasion of Cape Colony and dealing in succession with the battles of Talana, Elands-laagte, Rietfontein, Nicholson's Nek, Lombard's Kop, Willow Grange, Belmont, Enslin, Modder River, Magersfontein, Stormberg, and Colenso, as well as with the strategical situation in its different stages during the first three months of the war. The descriptions of the battles are written by members of THE TIMES war staff, who were present at them, very fully revised by the editor in collaboration with military experts, and nothing has been left undone to render them absolutely faithful records of the events.

Some of the chapters in this volume will be devoted to an examination of the military conditions precedent to the outbreak, as well as those obtaining during the conduct of the war. These chapters, containing observations on the mobilisation of the Field Forces, analyses of the British and the Boer military systems, with statistics and details of the Boer numbers, artillery, &c., must be regarded in the light of something more than of mere narrative or description, affording as they do an embodiment of facts, coupled with deductions and criticisms by those who viewed the course of events with full knowledge of the technique of the military operations. A Special Feature of this and of succeeding volumes will be the prominence given to the Boer side of the fighting, which has hardly been touched upon in any works yet published.

The volume will also contain maps of the scenes of operations and plans of the battles already enumerated.

Some Opinions of the Press on Vol. 1.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—'This book is written from a point of view which is not ours, but it is mere justice to say that it is written in a temperate spirit and with much ability.'

GLOBE.—'The book before us is complete in itself, and as a history of Anglo-Boer relations from 1815 to 1900 is without a rival either in comprehensiveness or accuracy.'

WORLD.—'Mr. Amery has performed an extremely difficult task with so much fairness and so comprehensive a view that we look confidently for his narrative of the actual campaigns.'

ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.—'A work so comprehensive and so generally accurate, according to existing facts, must take a foremost place at once, and of right, in contemporary literature.'

AFRICAN REVIEW.—'Almost certain to rank in this country as the work of reference par excellence of recent Transvaal history.'

MELBOURNE ARGUS.—'With very few exceptions, the carefully printed and illustrated work will be the final authority on the South African campaign, it is certainly the most detailed and most conscientious history that has yet appeared.'

SOUTH AFRICA.—'Will rank as the finest and most complete history of the great campaign.'

CAPE ARGUS.—'The history, when complete, is certain to become the standard work of reference on the subject, as well as a monument of the skill and political acumen of its talented editor.'

LITERARY BURGLARY.

Publishers and authors ought to be on their guard against what, for want of a better name, we may call Literary Burglary. The Literary Burglar does not write books himself, but he makes a living by transferring other people's work, and he does it in such a specious and clever way that often enough the victim has no redress. This is how it is done:—Having selected some popular writer's popular work, the Literary Burglar calls on or writes to the publisher, or calls on or writes to the author, and asks for permission to make an extract from the work; permission is given unsuspectingly for what the publisher and author think is to be merely a short extract, and it is perhaps thought not necessary to ask that the usual acknowledgment should be made. Some months afterwards the publisher learns by accident that another publisher is bringing out a work which—well, it would not be a work at all but for the 'extracts' in it. In fact it is all extract; and that without a word of acknowledgment to the work from which it is taken. The Literary Burglar has gutted the popular book, and re-issued it in a cheaper form. When asked for an explanation by the publisher, he says the author very kindly gave it to him; or he writes most effusively to remind the publisher that he himself had given permission when he had the pleasure of an interview on the subject.

The Literary Burglar is not confined to any particular class of literature; sometimes he makes up school 'Readers' and 'Text-Books' in this way. A case came to our knowledge last year where one of these Literary Burglars had obtained permission from an unsuspecting author to make a text-book out of some of the author's works. Unfortunately for him he wrote to the publishers to beg copies of the books to do it with, and the publisher was able to remind the author that he had no right to give away property which was partly his and partly the publisher's.

Of course where an author gives permission in this way he does so thoughtlessly, but none the less it makes it very difficult for a publisher to take action for infringement of his rights.

If the L. B. gets permission from an author generally of a vague kind in answer to a designedly vague request, he knows better, as a rule, than to ask the publisher as well; and when confronted with the product of his burglary he says: 'Oh, the author give me permission, and naturally I concluded he had full power to do so.' If the author gives his permission, but adds that that of the publisher must be obtained also, then the L. B. plays off the author's permission in such a way that it looks like discourtesy to the author not to allow the 'extract' to be made.

The moral of it all is that authors and publishers should be very wary and chary about giving permission for extraction of matter. They should make sure that they have the right to give permission, and, if they do it merely as far as they are concerned, they should let their co-partner know what they have done. Then, such permission should always be in writing and should specify exactly what may be taken and how it is to be acknowledged. Where circumstances warrant it a fee should be charged.

The Publishers' Association may possibly follow the example of the Photographers' Union, which, as we described recently, keeps a look out for infringements of its members' copyrights. The Association has appointed agents in the Colonies to look out for pirated editions, and, we believe, one of its next steps will be to look after certain Literary Burglars nearer home.

The offer of a reward for information leading to the detection of Literary Burglars would be beneficial, as a publisher has enough to do to look after his own books without searching for piracies in other people's.

Another obvious and very simple course of action would be for the Association to make a rule that the publisher of a book containing copyright matter taken from another publisher's book must inform the publisher what he intends to do before he takes it. At present he is not unnaturally inclined to put the blame on the burglar, who puts it on the author, who is perhaps dead.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Macmillan publish, as the eighth volume of their well-known 'Cambridge Natural History,' a treatise on 'Amphibia and Reptiles,' by Dr. Hans Gadow, Strickland Curator in the University of Cambridge. The work is designed not only for the student of morphology, but for the field naturalist, though a great portion of the book is concerned with anatomical details and questions of classification. It is enriched with drawings mainly from living specimens by Miss M. E. Durham.

* *

* *

Mr. Fisher Unwin's collection of Irish publications points to a revival of Celtic literature. In Wales, too, there seems to be a similar revival. Mr. Unwin has just published a book by an entirely unknown Welsh author which met with immediate approval from the critics. He has another book in preparation from a different Welsh author, likewise unknown, and other publishers have books by Welsh authors on their lists.

* *

'A Magnificent Set of Byroniana. Absolutely unique. Together 15 vols., all on large paper. Extra illustrated by the insertion of about 900 portraits of Byron's Friends and Contemporaries, views, scenes, &c., mostly in proof state, and some very scarce Autograph Letters and manuscript matter, &c. All neatly inlaid or mounted where necessary, and uniformly bound in green morocco, extra gilt edges, contents lettered, by Hering (bound about 60 years ago) price £200.' This item is from the catalogue, No. 1129, just to hand from Mr. Edward Howell, 83 Church Street, Liverpool. There are many other interesting lots in this catalogue.

* *

Messrs. Hutchinson will publish shortly Mr. Carlton Dawe's new novel 'Claudia Pole,' which deals with the fortunes of a charming girl who starts life as a typist in London.

* *

'The Dictionary of Architecture and Building,' biographical, historical, and descriptive, now published by the Macmillan Company, is edited by Mr. Russell Sturgis, Fellow of the American Society of Architects. The first volume covers the letters A-E. The only other dictionary of architecture in English is in eight small folio volumes dating from 1850-90. The features of the present work are many signed articles by eminent authorities, a minute system of alphabetical headings, and elaborate cross-references. In addition to a number of inset illustrations there are thirty-eight full-page pictures of famous buildings.

Mr. William Andrews, of Hull, writing on 'Whipping' in this country, in the new number of the Aldersgate Magazine, says Englishmen did not do all the flogging, as will be gathered from the following story. Thomas Tegg, the celebrated bookseller, was born at Wimbledon in 1776, and at an early age bound apprentice to a bookseller at Dalkeith. He related, in an interesting autobiography, that every market-day his master got drunk, and when he returned home he beat the whole of his apprentices. 'I have done nothing to deserve beating,' said Tegg on one occasion. 'Young English rascal,' replied the master, 'you may want it when I am busy, so I will give it to you now.'

* *

With the forthcoming April number the Public School Magazine, which is now in its seventh volume, passes into the hands of Messrs. A. & C. Black, under whose auspices it will in future be published. Mr. A. E. Johnson will continue to act as editor.

* *

'Five Years of My Life,' by Captain Dreyfus, is announced by Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.

* *

Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.'s spring list includes 'The Golden Tooth,' by J. McLaren Cobban; 'A Daring Spirit,' by Mrs. Bagot Harte; 'Devaytis,' by Marya Rodziewicz, translated by Count de Soissons; 'The Emperor's Design,' by Surgeon-Major H. M. Greenhow; 'A Stolen Wooing,' by Seyton Heath; 'Mary Anne of Parchment Buildings,' by Lucas Cleeve; 'The Cry of the Poor,' by Robert H. Sherard; 'Cruel Calumny,' by Mrs. Leith-Adams; 'A Painted Man,' by George Griffiths; 'A Deal with the King,' by J. F. Findlay; 'The Burden of an Honour,' by Robert St. J. Corbet; and 'A Sea of Fortune,' by Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.

* *

Mary E. Mann's long-deferred new novel, 'Among the Syringas,' is being published by Mr. Fisher Unwin this week. We understand that 'among its characters will be found several new specimens of the genus country clergyman, whose various idiosyncrasies this writer inclines always to portray. The heroine, enjoying a not too encouraging experience of those men with whom Fate has familiarised her, marries in the end a man whom she has never seen—a somewhat novel departure from ordinary methods.'

* *

'Clocks, Carillons, and Bells' is the title of a most interesting paper read before the Society of Arts on March 27, and printed in the Journal of the Society for March 29.

Dr. Francis E. Clark, the President of the Christian Endeavour Society, has recently returned from a long voyage—undertaken in the interests of the Society—to Japan and China. He travelled via the Trans-Siberian all-steam route, and was in all probability the first foreigner to go around the world by the new route. His experiences and the difficulties he met are given in a volume to be published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., entitled 'A New Way around an Old World.' The interest of the narrative is enhanced by the inclusion of sixty-five illustrations from photos, and a large map showing the ground covered by Dr. Clark's party.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will publish immediately after Easter 'Benenden Letters, 1753-1821,' edited by Charles Fred. Hardy, 8vo.—a consecutive series of family papers, containing a complete history of the life of William Ward (of the Weald of Kent and afterwards prisoner of war in France), forming a characteristic picture of the eventful times of George III. from several points of view.

* *

'The Annual of the British School at Athens for 1899-1900,' now published by Messrs. Macmillan, contains a considerable, though only a provisional, account of the excavations in Crete.

* *

The April issue of the British Workman contains an interesting article on 'Shakespeare and Temperance,' by Sir William H. Bailey, illustrated by a little-known portrait of the poet. A profusely illustrated article on the waxen effigies of England's Kings and Queens in Westminster Abbey is another attractive item of the contents. 'Modern Bee-keeping,' also fully illustrated, contains much curious lore, and will be read with interest. Several working-men contribute most useful papers on 'How to Use your Leisure.'

* *

We understand that the Educational Supply Association, Ltd., 42 Holborn Viaduct, E.C., will in future publish the 'Durham School Registers.'

* *

Newspaper publishers may be glad to know that Messrs. E. Marlborough & Co., of 51 Old Bailey, have recently added to their copyright series of 'Trade Account Books' a very useful 'Newspaper Publisher's Delivery Book,' size 13 by 8 in., ruled for cash columns &c.

* *

The first of a series of volumes by the Earl of Meath, entitled 'Our Empire,' is issued by Messrs. Harrison & Sons this week. The volume comprises 'Great Britain in Europe.' The various colonial dependencies are to be treated in subsequent volumes of the series.

* *

'Red Fate' is the title of a new novel by Mr. Edmund Forbes, which Messrs. Greening & Co. have in the press for early publication. Mr. Forbes is well known as a contributor to the magazines and literary papers.

We notice in the Second-hand Catalogue No. 222, of Mr. A. R. Smith, of 24 Great Windmill Street, London, a long list of 'Shakespeariana,' including many of the Shakespeare Society's publications.

* *

The Misses Robina and Kathleen Lizars, the popular Canadian writers, will shortly publish another story in England. Although so well known in Canada the Misses Lizars had scarcely been heard of in this country until the publication by Messrs. Greening & Co. of their novel 'Committed to his Charge.'

FICTION AND LIBEL.

LADY NOVELIST SUED BY HER PUBLISHER.

The circumstances of the sudden withdrawal from circulation last year of 'Charlotte Leyland,' a novel by Mrs. Mamie Beresford Ryley, were explained in the High Court, when the publisher, Mr. Grant Richards, sued the authoress for £112. 12s. 10d.

Shortly after the appearance of the book the solicitors of the Women's Institute wrote pointing out that the work contained a serious libel on that institution.

Counsel was consulted by the authoress, and, his opinion bearing out that of the solicitors, it was agreed to withdraw the novel.

In the witness-box Mrs. Ryley denied that she had undertaken to pay the cost of publication and withdrawal, which was now claimed for.

When she drew the character of Mrs. Hartopp, admitted witness, she had in her mind the lady superintendent of the Women's Institute.

Defendant, who had been connected with the institute she was alleged to have libelled, was ordered to pay the full amount claimed, with costs.—Daily Express.

NEWSENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor will preside at the festival dinner of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution on Tuesday, June 25, at Stationers' Hall. The special object of his Lordship's appeal for funds is to establish further pensions for the widows of newsvendors in commemoration of the reign of her late Majesty Queen Victoria.

The committee will be glad to have the names of gentlemen who will act as stewards; and, as a large assembly is anticipated in support of the Lord Mayor, an early application for tickets (at 21s. each) should be forwarded to the Secretary, Newsvendors' Institution, 16 Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

THE PUBLISHERS OF NEW YORK AND MR. CARNEGIE'S GIFT.

The publishers of New York are greatly interested in Mr. Carnegie's munificent gift of $5,200,000 to found branch libraries in Greater New York. The leading publishers agree that libraries create a taste for reading, and that publishers must profit by the strengthening of the reading habit among the people. The Carnegie gift and the amount of money it calls for from the city, with all the pros and cons to be taken into consideration, is leading to many discussions from the view-points of people of all classes and professions.—Publishers' Weekly.

THE LATE MISS CHARLOTTE YONGE.

We are able to give an excellent portrait of Miss Charlotte Yonge, by the courtesy of the proprietors of the Daily Graphic and Messrs. Elliot & Fry.

Miss Yonge was born at the charming little village of Otterbourne, Hampshire, on August 11, 1823, and for nearly the whole of her life she lived there, and was buried there in the churchyard of St. Matthew on Friday last, March 29, at the foot of the memorial of her old friend and pastor, John Keble. The church was crowded with friends and relatives, and 'her own people' of the village and district. Among the mourners present were Mr. Maurice Yonge, Miss Yonge of Pulsinck, Mr. Thomas Keble, Miss Sumner, Miss Christabel Coleridge, Miss M. Bramston, Miss Esmé Stuart, &c.

Miss Yonge was the daughter of Mr. Wm. Crawley Yonge, a Hampshire magistrate, who had formerly served in the 52nd Regiment; she was a staunch adherent of the High Church party. For thirty years she edited the Monthly Packet; and Who's Who for 1901 tells us that her favourite recreations were botany, conchology, and work in her beloved parish.

The best known and most popular of Miss Yonge's books is 'The Heir of Redclyffe,' most of the proceeds of which she gave towards the cost of the 'Southern Cross,' Bishop Selwyn's missionary schooner, and from the sale of her next most successful work, 'The Daisy Chain,' Miss Yonge sent the Bishop £200 for the Missionary College at Auckland, New Zealand.

For the long list of Miss Yonge's publications we must refer our readers to the volumes of the 'English Catalogue.' Charles Kingsley spoke of the girls of his day as reading the novels of Miss Yonge, 'and becoming all the wiser thereby'; nor have the daughters and grand-daughters of the girls of Kingsley's time been less appreciative of the work of the pure, tender, conscientious, and sympathetic worker and teacher—probably no stories written with a religious and moral purpose were ever so popular as those of Miss Yonge—the majority of which are published by Messrs. Macmillan, who have a sixpenny edition of 'The Heir of Redclyffe' in hand, for immediate publication.

The Secretary of the National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church says:

It is not generally known that the late Miss Charlotte M. Yonge devoted much of her time during the last fifteen years to the writing of stories for children between the ages of ten and fifteen.

Her chief aim was the production of tales that would interest and attract young people, and which would, without being too didactic, inculcate useful moral lessons. Some of these books, such as 'Under the Storm,' 'The Constable's Tower,' 'The Cunning Woman's Grandson,' 'The Treasures in the Marshes,' and 'Our New Mistress,' have had a large circle of readers, and still retain their popularity; whilst others, such as 'The Patriots of Palestine,' 'Founded on Paper,' 'The Wardship of Steepcombe,' 'The Carbonels,' 'The Slaves of Sabinus,' and her last book 'The Making of a Missionary,' are not perhaps so widely known as they deserve to be. Just before her death Miss Yonge was engaged in writing another book of the class referred to.

A QUESTION OF COPYRIGHT IN A SCHOOL BOOK.

MOFFATT & PAIGE (LIMITED) v. G. GILL & SONS (LIMITED) AND MARSHALL.—Judgment was delivered in this case on April 1. The action was brought by Messrs. Moffatt & Paige, publishers, to restrain the defendants from the alleged infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright in an annotated edition of Shakespeare's play, 'As You Like It,' prepared from an independent study of the text.

Mr. Warrington, K.C., and Mr. Henry Lynn appeared for the plaintiffs; Mr. P. Ogden Lawrence, K.C., and Mr. Percy Wheeler for Mr. Marshall; and Mr. J. A. Hamilton, K.C., and Mr. A. a'Beckett Terrell for Messrs. Gill & Sons.

Mr. Justice Kekewich said the issue to be decided was simply whether the second edition of the defendant Marshall's book was an infringement on the same lines as the first which should not infringe the copyright. If, therefore, he found he was at liberty to treat the first edition as the subject of complaints, or to regard the second as springing from it, he should not hesitate to find on those grounds alone that the plaintiffs' copyright had been infringed. It appeared from the consent order in the action relating to the first edition that the defendants paid agreed damages and agreed costs, and also bound themselves to destroy all copies in their possession. The necessary result of that was that the plaintiffs' claim could only extend to the second edition. As to the subject of literary notes, there was no doubt a striking similarity between the criticism of language made by the two authors, but he believed that all the criticisms could be found somewhere else, and thus were the common property of all educated men. As for the character sketches, and in particular that of Rosalind, there was a great general resemblance between Mr. Page's sketches and those of Mr. Marshall. On the whole, although believing that Mr. Marshall was far more indebted to Mr. Page than he had been willing to admit, he did not think that he could have been said to have extracted any vital part. The question arose whether, holding that Mr. Marshall had borrowed some language in particular passages from the plaintiffs' book, he was bound to grant an injunction. He held that there had been really no such use made by Mr. Marshall of the plaintiffs' book as entitled the plaintiffs to an injunction. The main question which one had to put to one's self was whether there was evidence of animus furandi. He thought there was not. As to damages, which could only be nominal, he saw no reason for granting the plaintiffs that relief. As regarded costs, he could not give any to Mr. Marshall. As the defendants, Gill & Sons, had already been sued by the plaintiffs, and had been condemned in damages as regarded the first edition, it would be hard to deprive them of costs when they had been successful as to the second edition. The plaintiffs must pay their costs.

A NEW HEBDOMADAL.

'With No. 209 regular hebdomadal publication will commence.'

This refers to the new issue of The Rambler, that edited by Dr. Johnson having expired, after an uneasy existence of nearly two years, on March 14, 1752.

'The Rambler' now, as heretofore, will exhibit small concern for the verdicts of the vulgar, will rarely harmonise with the key-notes of the age, will not be found to record the meretricious merits of those chuffs and gaberlunzies whom cold hearts and narrow souls delight to revere. Though he may be an unworthy successor in learning and letters, the new Rambler does not shrink from a comparison with the old, as regards a zeal for Tory principles or a devotion to the spirit and glories of the past.'

If anybody wants any further information we must refer to The Rambler himself. 14 Tavistock Street, Covent Garden; if he will send us his photograph we will publish it,—it should prove a fine old crusted portrait.

fringement of the copyright, of which the plaintiffs were the proprietors, in Mr. Page's book. The plaintiffs had deliberately elected to attack that edition and that edition only. He was compelled by the pleadings to restrict his decision to the second edition. Yet he thought the plaintiffs were entitled to know his opinion on the question whether, on the assumption that the first, as well as the second, edition was before him, the copyright had been infringed. That the first edition infringed the copyright was scarcely open to doubt. He counted for nothing the consent judgment which had been given concerning the first edition—to which Mr. Marshall was no party—but the admissions extracted from him in cross-examination showed that, especially as regarded the sketch of the character of Rosalind, he not merely derived great benefit from Mr. Page's book, but practically, in many particulars, copied it. He thought it was impossible for Mr. Marshall to compile a second

No. 7.—WILLIAM HUTTON, F.A.S.S., of Birmingham, 1723-1815.

Continued.

Next day he found himself at Walsall. There were no frames there. His feet were sorely blistered; he begged some fat from a butcher to rub on them, and found immediate relief, and then set off for Birmingham. There were three stocking-weavers there. One was an old Quaker named Evans, whom he asked to employ him. His reply was: 'You are a run-away apprentice; go about your business.' 'I retreated, sincerely wishing I had business to go about.' He next waited upon Holmes in Dale End, who gave him a penny to get rid of him. The next was Francis Grace, whose niece he married many years afterwards; but on this visit he was so closely questioned that he told three or four lies to patch up a lame tale, and he left the shop with the severe reflection that his lying brought him no advantage, for he was dismissed without any assistance.

It was now about seven in the evening, July 14, 1741, I sat to rest upon the north side of the old cross—the poorest of all the poor belonging to that great parish, of which twenty-seven years after I should be the overseer.

Two men in aprons noticed his forlorn condition, took him to the Bell Inn, gave him bread, cheese, and beer, and found him a lodging, where he slept for three-halfpence. He walked on next day to Coventry, then to Nuneaton and Hinckley. Everywhere the word 'Prentice' rang in his ears; they called him a boy and refused to employ him. One man named Millward did employ him one afternoon, when he earned two-pence, and his employer told him he would give him a bed if he would promise to return to his uncle in the morning. On the 18th he turned homewards woefully; he reached Ashby-de-la-Zouch with eightpence left out of his 2s. 'Extreme frugality,' he repeats, 'composes a part of my character.'

On the 19th he reached home; his father gladly received him and dropped tears for his misfortunes.

This unhappy ramble damped his rising spirit, he did not recover his balance for two years; it also ruined him in point of dress, for he was not able to reassume his former appearance for five years. 'It ran me in debt,' he says, 'out of which I have never been to this day, November 21, 1779.'

During the next two or three years nothing happened except that he became for a time infatuated with music,* it became his study and delight. He had purchased a bell-harp whose sounds he thought seraphic, but he had no books and no instruction, nor the least hint as to putting his instrument in tune. For six months he made every effort to get a tune out of it; he succeeded at last. Then he borrowed a dulcimer and soon learned to play on it. He made one like it out of the boards of an old trunk, his only tools being a pocket knife and a fork with one limb—with this he discoursed such lovely music that a young baker's-apprentice offered him 16s. for it, which he accepted, and bought a coat with the money; his friend practised vigorously for some time till he could play part of 'Over the Hills and Far Away' and then grew tired of it. The next time he saw him he asked how he was progressing. 'O damn the music, I couldn't make it do. I took a broomstick and whacked the strings and burned the body in the oven.'

At Christmas 1744 his servitude expired: he had served two seven years to two trades by neither of which he could subsist. He continued as a journeyman with his uncle. In 1746 his inclination for books began to expand, but money to buy them was wanting. His first purchase was three volumes of the Gentleman's Magazine, 1742-4. He could not afford to pay for binding, so he cobbled them together as best he could. He could buy only shabby books, and in this way he became acquainted with 'a shabby bookseller,' who was also a binder, and watched him at work: he never saw him perform one act but he could do it himself, so strong was his desire to acquire the art of bookbinding. With the assistance of this bookseller, he soon became a fair adept in binding. The first work he bound was Shakespeare's 'Venus and Adonis'; so well was it done that the bookseller was surprised. Charles Knight says: 'Ah! William Hutton, if you had known the value of those twenty-seven leaves! All the separate editions of "Venus and Adonis" are of great rarity.' He then bought from the same man, for 2s., an old worn-out press which had been destined for the fire. He studied its construction, and, with the aid of a hammer and a pin, he perfectly cured the machine. 'This,' he says, 'proved for forty-two years my best binding-press.' Now he bought a tolerably genteel suit of clothes and was so careful of it that it continued his best for five years. It was in that year, 1747, that his good uncle died.

In 1747 the desire and pride of his life was to wear a watch; he bought a silver one for 35s., it went ill, he gave it and a guinea for another one, which was quite as bad. Then he bought another brass one which he soon sold for 5s. which he gave away in charity; after that he went without a watch for thirty years. This year he began to 'drop into rhyme.'

In 1749 he took to bookbinding as his chief business, but he had no tools, and they were only to be got in London, so to London he decided to go, but he had no money; his good sister raised three guineas and stitched them in his collar, being certain that he would be robbed. She also put 11s. in his pocket. With this slender provision he started on Monday April 8. After a walk of ten miles he became so footsore that he could only walk with difficulty. His first stop was Leicester, where he left a pocket-knife, the loss of which he deplored because it was the gift of a friend and so worth to him ten times its money value. His next stop was at Brixworth, having walked fifty-one miles and spent fivepence. The following day he reached Dunstable, and on the third day, weary and worn out, he arrived at The Horns in Smithfield. He called for a chop and porter, but was so jaded that he could scarcely touch it. This was the only meal he tasted under a roof during the whole time of his stay in London. The next morning he breakfasted on firmity at a wheelbarrow; sometimes he had a halfpenny worth of soup and another of bread, at other times bread and cheese. 'I ate to live,' he says.

If a man goes to receive money it may take him a long time to transact business; if to pay money it will take him less, and if he has but little to pay it will take him still less. My errand fell under the third class. I only wanted three alphabets of letters, a set of figures and some ornamental tools for gilding books with leather and boards for binding.

He soon obtained these things, and then he determined to see all the sights of London that were to be seen without pay; but he did spend one penny to see Bedlam. He was in London three days: he had walked 125 miles to London, and was on his feet all the time he was there. On Saturday evening, April 13, he set out for Nottingham, having four shillings left out of the eleven shillings he had started with. On the 16th he reached Leicester—the landlady had carefully preserved the precious knife. He reached Nottingham the same evening, having walked forty miles. He had been away nine days—three in going, which cost 3s. 8d., three in London, which cost the same, and three in returning, which cost a trifle less. He brought back 4d. out of the eleven shillings he started with. Surely a youth who could walk 250 miles in six days (that is an average of nearly 43 miles a day) and spend three days in perambulating London at a total cost of ten shillings and eight-pence was no ordinary adventurer. He had an admirable capacity for telling everything he had seen, so this singular journey 'furnished vast matter for detail among his friends.'

It was now time to look out for a future place of residence. His plan was to fix upon some market town within a stage of Nottingham and open a shop there on market days. He fixed on Southwell as his 'first step to elevation.' It was fourteen miles away and the town as despicable as the road to it. He took a shop there at the rate of 20s. a year, sent a few boards for shelves, a few tools, and about 2 cwt. of trash worth perhaps a year's rent of the shop; he was his own joiner, put up the shelves, and in one day 'became the most eminent bookseller in the place.'

During that rainy winter he set out at five every Saturday morning, carried a bundle of books sometimes thirty pounds in weight, opened shop at ten, starved in it all day upon bread, cheese, and half a pint of ale, took from one to six shillings, shut up at four and trudged back, arriving at Nottingham at nine, where a mess of milk and porridge always awaited him. Nothing short of surprising resolution could have carried him through such fruitless toil as this.

In the month of February 1750 he took a journey to Birmingham to pass a judgment on the probability of future success there. He found there 'three eminent booksellers, Aris, Warren, and Wollaston,' and as he considered the town crowded with inhabitants he thought he might 'mingle in that crowd unnoticed by the three great men, for an ant is not worth destroying.'

On his return he fell into trouble through losing himself in Charnwood Forest, but eventually got back to Nottingham. He then gave notice to quit Southwell and 'prepared for a total change of life.' On April 10 he entered Birmingham for the third time to try if he could be accommodated with a small shop, and the next day agreed with Mrs. Dix for the lesser half of her shop, No. 6 Bull Street, at one shilling a week, and returned to Nottingham.

On May 13 a Mr. Rudsdall, a Dissenting minister of Gainsborough, let him have the refuse of his library at his own price. Mr. Rudsdall gave him a corn-chest in which the books, about 2 cwt., were packed, and for payment drew out the following note:

'I promise to pay to Ambrose Rudsdall one pound seven shillings when I am able.' Mr. Rudsdall added: 'You need never pay this note if you only say you are not able.' The books made a better show and were more valuable than all he possessed besides. On May 23 he had a hard parting from his friends and arrived at Birmingham on the 25th.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

At the last monthly meeting of the Board, Mr. C. J. Longman in the chair, reference was made to the death of Mr. Charles Buckland, who for many years was a Director of the Institution, and a resolution expressing the regret of the Board was passed unanimously. The sum of £99. 7s. 8d. was voted for the relief of 58 members and widows of members.

Re WHITE v. CONSTABLE.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—The issue of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR for March 30 contains a report, or what purports to be such, of the case of White v. Constable, in which I was plaintiff, heard before Mr. Justice Darling, without a jury, on March 22 last, which is a gross libel upon me. I have, therefore, to request that you will publish this letter in a conspicuous position in the next issue of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. Unless you do so I shall be under the necessity of at once instituting proceedings for libel. The report referred to is manifestly and throughout inspired by malice against me. You do not content yourself by publishing all the evidence against me and suppressing all, or almost all, the material evidence in my favour, but you intersperse your report with comments, and actually invent statements which were not made in court by any witness on either side, which have no foundation in fact, and which are absolutely and indisputably false. The whole tone of the report is marked by great malignity towards me, and is evidently intended to do me the greatest injury possible by holding me up to ridicule in the eyes of booksellers among whom the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR principally circulates. The statements and suggestions of which I complain are as follows:

(1) In Mr. John Murray's evidence you suppress his statement that the sales of fiction of every kind would be damaged by the delay and the war and that this would be so more especially in the case of an unknown writer.

(2) You say the interview with Mr. Murray was published in a daily paper. This is untrue; it appeared in the Academy.

(3) You make me say: 'He was an Irishman by birth, but his sympathies were not Irish.' This is untrue. I made no such statement, nor was any question tending to elicit such a statement put to me. It is malicious invention on the part of the writer of the report.

(4) You make me say: 'The book was directed against religious bigotry on both sides.' This is untrue; I never said so. Defendant's counsel suggested that the book was an attack upon Roman Catholics, and I answered: 'Certainly not; in so far as the purpose of the book was an ethical purpose it was in the nature of a protest against the religious bigotry and race-hatred which then [1690-1720] existed on both sides in Ireland.'

(5) The last paragraph in the first column (page 347) appears as if it were a continuation of my evidence in reply to Mr. Marshall Hall, whereas the statement I have just written in the foregoing paragraph (4) was made in cross-examination by Mr. Hammond Chambers. If animus against me had not obscured your judgment, you would have seen that it was impossible for me to give evidence such as that contained in the last paragraph of the first column. Almost every line in that paragraph contains a falsehood, and the whole is mere invention. (a) You say: 'The author's peculiar habit of spelling his pseudonym in two ways.' I had and have no such habit; but it is true that I did by a slip of the pen misspell the pseudonym. (b) You say: 'It [the error] was not discovered until early copies of the book had been delivered to the publishers and was about to be subscribed.' This is untrue; no such statement was made in court. No such evidence was given by anyone. The error on the binding was discovered a week before any copies were bound and a fortnight before the book was offered for subscription. It was stated by defendants' own witness, Mr. Leighton, that the error was discovered a week before the printed sheets of the book reached his establishment on the evening of April 7. It was discovered as soon as some few advance sheets arrived with the title-page by post. (c) You say: 'The publishers, on communicating with the author by way of satisfaction as to which was the proper spelling, received the somewhat characteristic reply from him, "Anybody ought to know that there was only one way of spelling 'Blayne', and that was the Irish way.'" Why 'somewhat characteristic'? The statement is wholly false. No such statement was made in court by anyone. No such statement was ever made by me to the defendants in court or out of it, or to anyone else, either verbally or in writing. It is a malicious invention on the part of the person who wrote your report. What I wrote to defendants was, that Blayne was a Welsh name, and should not be spelt 'Blayne.' (d) You say: 'Upon the publishers referring to the specimen cover which had been submitted to the author for his approval, it was found that the author had written in pencil on the cover, "This is the cover selected. Owen Blayne." The publisher at this, having to decide for himself, concluded that it should be Blayne, and forthwith proceeded to have the spelling on the cover rectified.' This is false and an invention. No such evidence was given in court, and if it had been it would have been untrue. As soon as the error was discovered by the binders, defendants wrote to me, and I replied immediately, saying that the book must not go forth with 'Blayne' on the title-page and 'Blayne' on the binding. Defendants agreed to this. I said further that if the error was mine I would accept responsibility, and I urged them to print new covers, to which also they agreed. As a matter of fact, they did not print new ones, but altered those that had been blocked. (e) You say: 'Witness stated that he had never seen the name "Blayne" spelt without the first "y," and swore that he had never written it so.' This is almost as gross a libel upon me as you could possibly have published. You endeavour to make out that I committed perjury. As a matter of fact I admitted frankly in court, and my counsel for me, that I had, by a slip of the pen, misspelt the name; but what I denied was that the error caused delay. If I had sworn that which your report says I did, I must have committed perjury, for I had seen weeks before the trial a copy of my letter in which I had misspelt the name.

(6) The next paragraph exhibits yet more clearly the animus of the author of your report. It says: 'It was evident from the two witnesses now called that the plaintiff had sought and found bad advice from some other London publisher.' This is as false as it is malignant. I never sought and never obtained the advice of any publisher either in London or out of it.

(7) You suppress all that part of my evidence in which it was made clear that the book was a saleable one, both Messrs. Hodges & Figgis and Messrs. Eason & Son, of Dublin, having offered to put it on sale for me nearly three years after publication. Of 110 copies put on sale in November the latter firm has sold 78 already, yet you are careful to give the evidence of defendants' traveller, who swore that six months after publication he offered it for the first time to these two firms, and failed to sell a single copy.

(8) You make Mr. Doubleday say that I paid him '£110 towards the cost of producing 1,500 copies.' This is untrue, and Mr. Doubleday did not say it. I paid him £95, which is more than the cost of production, and £15 for advertising. Defendant said what you, in pursuance of the malicious purpose which marks the report throughout, omit—namely, that he only bound 600 copies, that the remainder were still unbound, and that he did not know where his printer got the book printed. As a matter of fact it was printed in Holland, the contract having been given to Mr. Wager-Taylor, of Eldon Street, E.C., and this was the true cause of the delay.

(9) You make Mr. Doubleday say that I selected the type. He did not say so; and if he had it would have been untrue. It was stipulated in the contract that my book should be produced in a style 'no way inferior as to paper, type, and binding to that of the book called "Green Fire," by Miss Fiona Macleod.' Defendants were at liberty to use any small pica type they pleased, so long as it was clear and good.

(10) You make Mr. Doubleday say: 'When at the end of March the book was printed, and an early bound copy sent to the author, it appeared that in giving instructions for the binding the author had made a mistake in the spelling of his pseudonym.' This is wholly untrue. Mr. Doubleday never said it. The book was not printed at the end of March, and no early bound copy was ever sent to me, nor did I give any instructions for the binding.

(11) You make Mr. Jackson say that he got the book subscribed in company with Mr. Meredith's 'Essay on Comedy.' This is untrue. He said that my book was subscribed, and 'The Essay on Comedy' declined.

(12) In your report of Mr. Leighton's evidence you have suppressed the most material part of his statement, and I cannot resist the conclusion that you have done so maliciously. Mr. Leighton said that he did not receive the printed sheets of the book, with the exception of a few that came by post, until the evening of April 7. April 8 was Good Friday, April 9 was Saturday, April 10 Sunday, and April 11 Easter Monday. On April 12 the name on the binding covers was rectified, and on April 13 the books were ready for delivery. Your report gives April 15, which is incorrect. This evidence was given in answer to Mr. Marshall-Hall and is of the highest importance. This, no doubt, explains the reason why you have suppressed it. Even if there never had been any error in the spelling of the pseudonym the books could not have been bound at an earlier date than April 12, and they actually were bound on April 13.

(13) You omit to state that by the contract defendants undertook to sell as remainders copies unsold on December 31, 1899, and that they did not do so. I have just sold the whole of these copies—fifteen months later. Yet Mr. Justice Darling did not think that I was entitled to more than £5 damages.

In many other respects your report is misleading and in some is so written as to be scarcely intelligible. But as these parts of it do not libel me, I take no notice of them.

Yours &c.,

THE AUTHOR OF 'THE MACMAHON.'

[We are sorry that any inaccuracies should have crept into our report of the case, and can assure Mr. White that we had no intention whatever to misrepresent him or be unfair to him in any way. Our report was made up from three different sources, none of which we had the least reason to question, and we can only express our regret that anything appeared which was incorrect, or of which Mr. White has reason to complain as unjust to him, and we gladly publish his letter. So far from having suppressed anything, we put in the account just as it came to us, without note or comment—in fact, we had not even time to see a proof. We hope Mr. White will accept our assurance that we had no malicious feelings against him and have none.—Ed. P.C.]

THE LITERARY YEAR-BOOK.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—In the 'Literary Year-Book' for 1901 I have expressed regret at the fact that literature is not adequately represented in this country; and in view of a later expression and of a reference to the Society of Authors, you have construed my remarks into an attack on that body. There are ample proofs of friendliness towards the Society (of which I am a member) in the Year-Book, and the words I have used cannot fairly be interpreted as you have interpreted them—this, in a moment, I will prove. But I admit that I do think the methods of the Society of Authors are often open to criticism, and as the 'Literary Year-Book' professes impartiality it is only right that this criticism should be expressed.

It is, however, with your apparent failure to look carefully into the words I have written that I am mainly concerned. This, in three particulars.

1. Your failure seems clear to me, in the first place, because you actually state that the Society of Authors is 'the only Society which claims to represent literature in this country at all.'

2. In the second place, because you seem to have forgotten that the Society of Authors, quite apart from the fact just mentioned, does not claim to represent literature, but literary property. This limitation is a most important one, and the Society has called attention to it again and again.

3. In the third place, because my words relative to the supposed 'distinction' of membership of the Society of Authors are clearly addressed, not to the Society, but to certain correspondents, whose absurd letters merit this good-natured rebuke.

Now with regard to these three points, permit me to refer you to the simple facts.

1. Literature is not adequately represented in this country. So true beyond all dispute is this, that in suggesting a criticism of the statement the very name of the one Society which does claim to represent literature escapes your memory! The Royal Society of Literature, one would suppose, with its high-sounding title, long traditions, legal standing, might fulfil the demand that is made. The facts are well known: the true meaning of them is best understood by comparing the position of our literature, and incidentally this Society, firstly with our other great professions and interests, and next with Continental countries.

2. The Society of Authors has done much admirable work for the material interests of authors; on the other hand, there is not absolute unanimity among men of letters as to some of its methods. It is my duty to give all views a hearing. But how can my main question as to the representation of literature be answered in the affirmative, when you remember that the Society of Authors is concerned, not with literature, but with business matters arising out of literature? Had I asserted that no society represents authors you might have complained. Might one not truly say that the Athenæum Club is more truly representative of literature than either of the societies I have named, and yet that the club is far from fulfilling all the required conditions? No; literature is not adequately represented here, and until we take a leaf from the book of one of our neighbours it never will be.

3. Into your argument concerning the distinction of membership of the Society of Authors I cannot follow you. Anyone who writes a book or even a pamphlet, and pays a fee, can be enrolled a member: therefore such enrolment is no distinction in itself. The distinguishment of Mr. Thomas Hardy has nothing to do with it, any more than the refusal of other distinguished authors to join the Society has anything to do with it. Literary distinction depends upon spiritual, not upon material facts, and those among my correspondents who confuse the two are mischievous creatures. My remarks were addressed to them, but any being or society that should encourage them would justly be numbered among those who 'disseminate fads and fallacies.' And so I venture to dispute the truth of your third inference, in common with the others.

I have only to add that I think a good deal may be said for Mr. Phillpotts' view of the Blackmore Memorial. There is no suggestion in my book that literature should stand aloof from any memorial, merely that the lovers of Blackmore's books and the influential individuals whose advocacy of such movements is generally of importance should take the lead. There is a good deal to be said on the various sides of such a question as this; but if Mr. Blackmore's original publisher and friend—whom the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR represents—frown upon the idea, it is more than possible that nothing further will be heard of it.

Faithfully yours,

HERBERT MORRAH.

156 Charing Cross Road, W.C.:

April 2, 1901.

[There was no frowning upon the idea of a memorial to Mr. Blackmore—we merely asked for information.

We did not suppose anyone would take our defence of the Society of Authors seriously, least of all Mr. Morrah.

But if he takes our jest so seriously we tremble for the effect of what is in store for him in the Author; as we see Sir Walter Besant announces that he is going to notice the 'Literary Year-Book' in his May number.

Mr. Morrah appears not to know that the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR and the Society of Authors have often attacked each other (without much damage on either side), and the opportunity of defending the Society from the 'lamentable reflection'—we did not say 'attack'—on it was too good to be lost. All we deplored was that the 'Literary Year-Book' should say that the Authors' Society did not represent literature, and that it is no distinction to belong to it; if that is not lamentable, we are sorry.—Ed. P.C.]

ON SALE OR RETURN.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—From experience gained in one of the chief Dublin bookshops, I certainly think it advantageous to a publisher to send out books 'on sale or return.'

The plan adopted by Mr. W. Heinemann, and followed by several other houses, works extremely well with us. Books published at 6s. and over are sent on sale, and in a large number of cases we have sold from six to twelve copies of an expensive or slow-selling book, where otherwise we should have been afraid to re-order after selling one or two.

I can support 'King's Road' re French novels, but not having sufficient data at hand cannot give percentage of returns, but I do not think they exceed 10 or 15 per cent.

I also think it better to allow booksellers to write for the books they require than for publishers to send them out indiscriminately.

The question of 'cloth or paper covers' does not touch the above. Unless a radical change is made in the published price of books, the Continental custom would be of no pecuniary advantage to the British publisher.

We issue novels in cloth covers at 6s., whereas a French novel in paper is only 3s.

The extra expense of binding in cloth is not very great, and the increased facility in keeping stock clean and undamaged more than compensates for the difference. The prospect of (say 25 per cent. of) one's stock being bound in paper covers is by no means a pleasant one.

Yours obediently,

DEAR SIR,—In your issue for March 30, page 351, column 1, I note that you enter Elffers's 'Englishman's Guide to Speedy and Easy Acquisition of Cape Dutch' as published by Messrs. Rees. You had already entered this same book in your issue for February 9, page 145, column 2, as published by my firm. May I beg you to formally take notice that in virtue of an agreement with Messrs. DAVID NUTT.

IN MEMORIAM.

We regret to announce the death, at the comparatively early age of 55, of Mrs. Ruth Bacon, wife of Mr. G. W. Bacon, the well-known map publisher. Her decease will be deeply regretted by all who knew her.

TRADE CHANGES.

Messrs. Oliver & Boyd, Edinburgh, have been appointed the Agents in Scotland for the sale of Government Publications, including Acts of Parliament, Parliamentary Papers, Customs Forms, and other works published by H.M. Stationery Office.

THE LONGEST ECLIPSE OF THE SUN
WITHIN HISTORICAL TIMES.

The eclipse of the sun which takes place on May 18 next will have the longest totality within history (6½ minutes), and there will be no other until 1904. Professor David P. Todd, the well-known American astronomer, is now on his way to the Dutch East Indies to observe the eclipse, accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Mabel Loomis Todd. Mrs. Todd is the author of 'Total Eclipses of the Sun,' and has previously made long journeys with her husband to observe the total eclipses of the sun in 1887 and 1896.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. publish the English editions of the astronomical works of Professor and Mrs. Todd.

COPYRIGHT IN PROCESS BLOCKS.

An interesting and important point is raised in the article on 'Copyright,' by Mr. Warwick H. Draper, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, in the new issue of 'The Literary Year-Book.'

Referring to the draft of the new 'Artistic Copyright Bill,' Mr. Draper says:—'The draft Bill contains special provisions as to engravings and prints, which, if passed as they now stand, will require the careful attention of those who give their designs to the makers of the instrument by which the engraving or print is to be produced. For, to put a concrete case, it seems that if A, the proprietor of a design, desiring a process block to be made of the same, gives the design to B, an engraver of process blocks, B retains a copyright in the work when he hands over to A the "block" he has made, in the absence of a written assignment. It would surely be simpler to allow the delivery of the "block" to operate as an assignment, as in the case of a photo negative.'

There are other points in Mr. Draper's article, which extends to over a dozen pages, well worthy the attention of all interested in copyright generally.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. G. W. Bacon & Co., Ltd.—'Bacon's Interesting Drawing Charts,' containing 24 Outline Drawings of Mammals and Birds. These simple outlines will be very useful in elementary drawing classes.

From Mr. W. B. Clive, University Tutorial Press. 'Cicero: Philippic II,' edited by A. H. Allcroft, M.A. Oxon. Mr. Allcroft contributes to the 'University Tutorial' series a scholarly edition of 'Cicero's Second Philippic' oration. To this he has prefixed an introduction containing a biography of Cicero, supplemented by a chronological table of the principal events in his life. Copious critical and elucidatory notes and a very full index of proper names enhance the value of what should prove a useful aid to both tutors and pupils.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'Two Sides of a Question,' by May Sinclair. Those who appreciate subtle analysis of character will enjoy 'The Cosmopolitan,' the first of the two stories in this volume—for the rest we are afraid it will be caviare. The book frequently reminds us of the methods of Mr. Henry James, and, like the more recent novels of that distinguished author, it leaves the reader a little mystified as to the actual personality of the chief character. Possibly Miss Sinclair has not a perfectly clear conception of Freda Tancred herself, or it may be that while working out her scheme she allowed her subject to get a little out of hand, and so the portraiture became obscure and perplexing. But whatever the cause, the fact remains as stated. When Maurice Durant goes down to Coton Manor to become the prey of that intolerable bore Colonel Tancred, we realise from the first that entanglements between himself and the unattractive Freda will be the result. She loves him, and shows him that she loves him, but he draws back. Afterwards, when she goes into the outside world, and freedom from restraint and the glorious sense of living bring out all the latent charm of her appearance, the positions are reversed. But it is now too late; enjoyment of life and the keen pleasure to be derived from exploring fresh lands take up all Freda's thoughts to the exclusion of any more personal emotion. The second story, 'Superseded,' depicts the other side of the question—a woman possessing none of the joyous exaltation of life, but starved, cabined, deprived of all the natural pleasures of existence; reduced to the mere position of a machine, and a worn-out creaking machine at that. Poor little Miss Quincey is a wonderfully pathetic figure, and the brusqueness of her aunt, Mrs. Moon, only serves to throw out more forcibly the delicacies of her character. We fancy the majority of readers will prefer the experiences of poor 'Juliana' to the character study of Freda Tancred, but for all that 'The Cosmopolitan' is by far the more original and talented work.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Australasia: The Commonwealth and New Zealand,' by Arthur W. Jose. In this volume of the 'Temple Cyclopædic Primers' we have an attractive, yet concise, account of Australia, its discovery, the convict settlement in New South Wales, the history of that colony and of the experiments made in West and South Australia and New Zealand. Then comes a narrative of the discovery of gold and of the troubles resulting from the licensing system. This is followed by chapters on political mechanism, including systems of government and land laws; on self-government, on the various elements of the population, and on social development, which last-named subject is, as might be expected, not less interesting reading than the other subjects dealt with. At the same time Mr. Jose does not conceal the difficulties and limitations that surround the task of endeavouring to give an adequate notion of the Australia of to-day. 'Readers must remember,' he says, 'that Australia's history is her worst side; in spite of it, not by virtue of it, she is what her lovers know. It is the land and men that matter, not the dates and events. And this that matters is what no written word can explain or truly describe—the free air that invigorates life and thought, the bush that we are homesick for, the mates that are the best in the world.' A list of authorities for the statements made and information conveyed in this handy and useful volume is appended to it.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Golden Tooth,' by J. Maclaren Cobban. The elucidation of a murder, if skilfully worked out, has always a singular attraction for the imaginative mind, and Mr. Cobban's treatment of the subject possesses many features of absorbing interest. The hero, a young retired soldier, after being committed to prison charged with the murder, escapes in a peculiarly perilous manner, and thereafter has many exciting adventures. Chief attraction, however, circles round the doings of an amateur detective, the imperturbable Mr. Townshend, whom one of the characters—a woman—calls a 'terrible man'; which, to do him full justice as an investigator of crime, he certainly proves himself to be. Mr. Cobban has deftly imparted a touch of impressive distinction to the appearance of his leading characters. The detective is quite Mephistophelean in his personal attributes, and the villain wears a black patch over his eye which seems to stand out with remarkable clearness. As for the golden tooth, it occupies a prominent place in the work of unravelment. But before this desirable consummation is reached, the reader has various surprises sprung upon him. These go to increase the general interest, and the verdict we are sure, when the conclusion of the book is arrived at, will be that Mr. Cobban has seldom written a more powerful story, though here and there the volume betrays signs of hurried workmanship.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Column,' by Charles Marriott. This is undoubtedly an exceedingly clever novel, though the author has extended his study of the heroine to such dimensions as somewhat to destroy the balance of the story. Nor will her dreamy, mystical temperament be altogether to the liking of readers with a partiality for the distinctly human. Of Cathcart, the sculptor—the one being in the book who arouses our sympathy—we get little more than a passing glimpse. Why Mr. Marriott did not bring about the meeting of Daphne and Cathcart, and so carry the story to its natural conclusion, we are at a loss to imagine. Possibly he found that he had devoted too much space to Daphne in the earlier portion of the work, and, with the young author's love of his material, objected to cut anything out. As it is, Cathcart fades out of the picture, and the heroine commits suicide, while the real interest of the story may be said to begin where Mr. Marriott so suddenly leaves off. We fancy that Daphne's tragic ending was an afterthought on his part—the only way out of a difficulty; either this or he must have extended the work to another volume. So much for minor flaws. When we turn to individual portions of the story we are filled with honest admiration of the author's powers. If it be a first work, as we are led to suppose, then assuredly a career of some eminence lies before Mr. Marriott. The portraiture of Daphne may be out of proportion, and possibly injudicious in its selection, but it reveals gifts of unusual merit. The conception of the character is wonderfully clear and distinguished by rare insight. Nor is Mr. Marriott wanting in the capability of suggesting personality in a few vigorous touches; Cathcart, for instance, stands out of the narrative firm, clearly defined, and distinctly attractive. There are many other interesting actors in the story, and all possess strongly marked individuality. The picture of a crotchety doctor is particularly good, while the disposition of Daphne's husband, if less original in its conception, is drawn with admirable fidelity to actual life.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Golden Wang-ho,' a sensational story, by Fergus Hume. The story opens with the arrival at Fletmouth of young Lieut. Jayne, R.N., just returned from a two years' cruise in Chinese waters. He is anxiously awaited on the pier by his betrothed cousin, Norah Wharton, and her school-girl sister, Fanny, in attendance on whom is a red-haired school-boy cousin, Teddy Vyse. While the young officer and his cousins are exchanging greetings a mysterious, wretched-looking, one-eyed Chinaman is seen hovering round the group, but suddenly disappears in the evening mist. After the young people have arrived at Mrs. Wharton's house, Leonard Jayne presents Norah with a six-inch idol of beaten gold which had been given him by a Chinese pirate when dying. 'I cut him down, so I don't know why he should have made me his legatee. For no good purpose, I've sometimes thought.' It is around this idol, which gives its name to the book, and the one-eyed Chinaman that the interest of Mr. Fergus Hume's sensational story gathers. That same night Lieut. Jayne, who has only a few hours' leave on shore, mounts his bicycle at the gate of his aunt's house to join the launch which is waiting to put him on board his ship, and spins off in the darkness, but never arrives at the pier, and the boat leaves without him. Here the sensational interest of the story begins, and is well maintained until the end. There is comedy as well as tragedy in this book, which would make a reputation for its author if that had not been made years ago by 'The Mystery of a Hansom Cab.'

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'The Nineteenth Century and After,' ever up to date in its contents, leads off in the April number with several articles bearing on the army question. These are arranged under two headings, respectively entitled 'Our Last Effort for a Voluntary Army' and 'Some Suggestions for Army Reform.' Under the first of these headings Mr. Henry Birchenough gives us 'A Civilian View,' from which he comes to the conclusion that sooner or later our statesmen must ask the British people to take upon themselves the duty and the privilege of personal military service in defence of the Empire of which they are so justly proud; while Major-General Frank S. Russell, under the title 'A Military View,' treats of the subject from an opposite standpoint. In the matter of 'Suggestions for Army Reform' we have enlightening articles from Sir Herbert Maxwell ('Military Training School for Lads'), the Earl of Arran ('A Military Provident Fund'), and Miss Ethel McCaul ('Army Nursing'). In regard to the other papers of the number we may especially mention 'The Modesty of Englishwomen,' by Mrs. William Mahood; 'Doctors in Hospital,' by Mr. B. Burford Rawlings, a very interesting article, frank and outspoken, but scarcely free from contentious matter; and 'Robert Browning the Musician,' by Miss A. Goodrich-Freer. All the contents, however, are so uniformly interesting that it seems unfair to draw attention to any individual article. The number is thoroughly attractive from first page to last.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—The collection of magazines issued by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are particularly attractive this month, each being distinguished by features which render it especially welcome to the class of reader for which it is intended. In the Empire Review Sir Charles Dilke writes of 'The Command-in-Chief'; there is an interesting article, entitled 'My Visits to the Dowager-Empress of China,' from Lady Macdonald; and Dr. J. P. Mahaffy supplies some thoughtful observations on 'The Ebb and Flow in National Literature.' Among the other contributors are the Earl of Scarborough, Sir Lepel Griffin, Sir John Bramston, the Hon. John A. Cockburn, Edward Dicey, and Sir Michael Foster.—The April Century is particularly rich in fiction, there being no less than seven short stories, to say nothing of serial work. An article that will attract a considerable amount of attention is devoted to 'Personal Reminiscences of Queen Victoria,' by an anonymous writer who claims to have seen a good deal of Her Majesty during the summer of 1886, 'while temporarily forming part of the suite of an Illustrious Personage, a guest of the Queen's, at Osborne House.' It is full of anecdotes, and very readable. The late Mr. Charles Dudley Warner's essay on 'Fashions in Literature' will have charm for the book student, while the traveller will cheerfully accompany Mr. Augustine Birrell in his further progress 'Down the Rhine,' the passage now performed being from Koblenz to Rotterdam. The illustrations of the number are as usual both numerous and beautifully printed.—'Book Hunting' in Macmillan's Magazine presents some amusing aspects of the occupation. The author thinks it is quite impossible to get the better of the provincial curiosity-dealer who includes a few books in his collection, and he gives a laughable illustration of the bargaining that usually ensues.—On St. Nicholas it is not necessary to make any comment, except that the magazine well sustains its high reputation as a periodical for young people.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Efficiency and Empire,' by Arnold White. The self-complacency of this country is no doubt very great. We believe in our navy, our army, our judicial system, our public service, our civilisation, our financial resources, and our government as being superior to that of any other nation under the sun. This is all very well, but it should not lead us to be blind to our faults. It was this same foolish pride and disregard of outside influences, as Mr. White points out, that led to the downfall of France and the ignoble figure she cut in the Franco-German war. Germany, on the other hand, profited by the lesson administered by Napoleon, with the result that she has become a great power. Britain through recent events has received a warning to reorganise her Education, her system of Imperial Defence, and the Administration of her Public Affairs. It is to a consideration of where the faults lie that Mr. White devotes his volume. In a number of interesting chapters he reviews the position of this country, looking at the matter from the standpoint of the Constitution, Political Honour, the Caste System, our Moral and Physical Inefficiency, the Foreign Office, the Consular Service, the Treasury, the Colonial Office, the War Office, the Admiralty, and Education. Under each of these headings Mr. White fulminates some weighty indictments. He points out, for instance, that scandals and breakdowns, when reported, are associated with Departments where privilege and the influence of cliques, caste, and 'smart' society are predominant; that a race of professional philanthropists have sprung up whose struggles for existence tend to pauperise the masses by killing the wish for self-help; that the claim for individual irresponsibility by Ministers goes to the root of the causes of our failures in South Africa, of our undelivered letters, and of the incapacity of our agents entrusted with our affairs in foreign countries; and he makes other and sweeping assertions of a similar kind. The conclusion at which he eventually arrives seems a little simple after so much tilting at abuses. Two great changes are needed which require neither legislation nor taxation. Restore individual responsibility and enforce it on high and low; and, secondly, open a career to talent. In these alterations Mr. White sees a defence against all approaching misfortune. His book is interesting, but seems at times to lack balance. No doubt many of the administrative evils that he speaks of are well worthy of his scathing criticism; and in any case the opinions of a writer who has paid so much attention to the Public Services merits the utmost respect.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Life and Correspondence of the Right Hon. Hugh C. E. Childers, 1827-1896,' by his son, Lieut.-Col. Spencer Childers, C.B. Two volumes. The main impression of Mr. Childers derivable from these pages is of a clear-headed business man, sensitive and conscientious in all his public dealings, and never sparing himself any labour to accomplish thoroughly the work he had in hand. The 'Life' is chiefly remarkable for political facts rather than any sidelight thrown on the social or literary aspects of the time; and of facts Mr. Childers, as he conclusively showed during his tenure of office as First Lord of the Admiralty, Secretary of State for War, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Home Secretary, possessed a masterly grasp. From his very early years—when at the age of twenty-three he went out to Melbourne and obtained an appointment as Inspector of Schools, ultimately rising to the dignity of Auditor-General, an office carrying with it a seat in the Legislative Council and duties analogous to those of a Chancellor of the Exchequer—his work had been cast among figures and the organisation of systems. His letters as now given to the public are admirable specimens of what official correspondence should be—concise, clearly expressed, unflinchingly loyal to the object in view; but they are not, apart from their political bearing, remarkably interesting. The most attractive portion of the work refers to the time when Mr. Childers was at the War Office. The information and documents given in regard to this period are fuller than at other stages of his career. The whole question of our South African policy is passed in review, and we are made acquainted with the opinions of the home authorities at the time of the Boer rising in 1880, with the despatches of Sir George Colley and Sir Evelyn Wood. In the same year Mr. Childers set his mind to some form of army reorganisation. As a matter of fact he had never been particularly anxious to go to the War Office, for, with his practical insight, he thoroughly realised the enormous difficulties attending any effort at reform. Two years later followed the crisis in Egypt, the bombardment of Alexandria, seizure of the Suez Canal, and the memorable battle of Tel-el-Kebir. Mr. Childers's tenure of office had certainly been distinguished by many exciting events. One of the marked features of the book is the powerful testimony it affords to the interest taken by her late Majesty in public affairs, and of the kindly solicitude she ever evinced for the welfare of her subjects, rich and poor. At the time of the Egyptian crisis she was much distressed by a report that the soldiers at the front were unable to get any tobacco, and she at once instituted inquiries into the matter. Of the care devoted by Lieut.-Col. Spencer Childers to this interesting record of his father's life, almost every page supplies evidence, and the work has been most conscientiously done. We should also pay a well-merited word of praise to the general production of these volumes. They are light, easy to handle, excellently printed, and tastefully bound. The illustrations, mostly portraits, form an additional attraction.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Moby Dick; or, the White Whale,' by Herman Melville, with an introduction by Louis Becke. To those readers, fond of sea life and its surroundings, who have yet to make acquaintance with one of the most fascinating and powerful writers who ever took the Pacific Ocean for his scene, we would heartily say, Read this reprint. Literary style Herman Melville may not have had, but in knowledge of the whaler's life and the mysteries and dangers that surround it there have been none to surpass him. There is no exaggeration in Mr. Louis Becke's statements that 'Moby Dick' is one of the best 'sea books' ever written. The present edition is well printed in small but clear type, and is illustrated.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Yeomanry Cavalry or Mounted Infantry?' by Lancelot Rolleston. It is proposed to convert the yeomanry into mounted infantry, and against this course Colonel Rolleston utters a spirited protest. That advantageous changes might be made in the yeomanry admits of no doubt—changes in the direction of great efficiency, better discipline, longer training, more capable horsemanship, and so forth; but no useful purpose would be served, so far as he sees, by altering the personnel of the corps. Indeed, the yeomanry, considering their limited opportunities for drill, have done exceedingly well in South Africa, and such faults as they have presented have been equally shared by the regular cavalry. Colonel Rolleston is a staunch supporter of the yeomanry as at present constituted, and he argues their case with an outspoken directness that is very telling. There is undoubtedly much good sense in his reasoning.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Scoundrels & Co.,' by Coulson Kernahan. The adventures of the supposed narrator of this story furnish extremely lively reading. He goes down to Southend to board a friend's yacht, and is put by mistake on board the wrong ship. Here he is speedily introduced to a band of mysterious conspirators, constituting a syndicate for 'the taking over and carrying on of everything in the way of agitation and revolt—from a secret society for the assassination of crowned heads and tyrants down to an agitation against an unpopular landlord, a political meeting, or a strike.' He subsequently becomes a member of this diabolical gang, and his efforts are directed to frustrating all their nefarious schemes. In this he enjoys remarkable luck, and on more than one occasion escapes detection by the narrowest of shaves. Ultimately the society is broken up, and the last of the conspirators is lodged in gaol. The story is a very good one of its kind, but perhaps loses something of its thrilling interest towards the close by reason of the repetition of the same situation. It is illustrated by Stanley L. Wood.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'May Silver,' by Alan St. Aubyn. A very pleasant sympathetic story on a very unpleasant theme. For, look at it from almost whatever point of view we may, the Boer war cannot be considered a pleasant subject. 'May Silver,' at the opening of the story, is engaged to Lieutenant Richard Graham. The wedding presents are already beginning to come in and the trousseau has been ordered, when war is declared, and May's lover is soon after ordered to the Cape. This blow falls while the heroine is staying with Mrs. Reach, a still youngish lady, who had married a younger brother of May's mother. The marriage has, so far, not been a very happy one, in spite of ample pecuniary means and three young and pretty children. Gerald Reach is captain in a Militia regiment, a Somersetshire corps; for he has a place in that shire as well as a town house. Young Graham goes away after a sad farewell, and soon after Gerald Reach is ordered to South Africa. After her husband's departure, Mrs. Reach, who is fond of hunting, is constant in attending hunt meetings and following the hounds, generally riding side by side with a wealthy country squire, Tom Lovelace, captain in a Somersetshire Yeomanry regiment. Hence danger to domestic felicity. But we must leave the reader here to the enjoyment of a brightly written book. The scene of the story is laid mainly in London and on or about Exmoor. There are some good specimens of character drawing, and the children of Captain Reach, especially Peter, and the little black pup Pompey are cleverly described.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons have added 'Bleak House' to their beautifully printed 'New Century Library' edition of the works of Charles Dickens. We also return with pleasure to the pages of Boz, but the pleasure is intensified by the legible type, convenient form, and lightness of this marvellous series.—Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd., publish in their handsome new issue of F. Marion Crawford's novels his fine story 'Marzio's Crucifix.'—Mr. Grant Richards has issued a sixpenny edition of 'The Yellow Danger,' by M. P. Shiel, a story so ingeniously constructed, so full of incident, and so well told that it must command a large sale in its new and accessible form.—Messrs. Morison Brothers, of Glasgow, have sent out a new sixpenny edition of 'Literary Coincidences,' by W. A. Clouston, a book which at the time of its first appearance attracted considerable attention.—We have received from Messrs. James Parker & Co. a copy of the second edition of 'Sacrifice,' by the Rev. Prebendary Berdmore Compton. The volume, in addition to its deep interest for religious readers, will be found useful for purposes of class instruction.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

JACKSON'S U.P. PENS

Specially adapted for Elegant and Rapid Writing, and
for all Styles of Penmanship

THE great demand for these Pens has suggested the production of two extra kinds of the same size and shape as the No. 4 Corresponding Pen, which is such a general favourite. The New G Nib is characterised by a greater fineness and flexibility, so that for those who indulge in fine writing and for Shorthand Writers it will be found unsurpassed. The New J Pen, with a broad but still somewhat flexible point, is richly gilt, and is eminently adapted for large bold styles of Penmanship, being peculiarly suitable for Ladies, whether they write vertically or obliquely. No more durable and delightful pen need be desired.

A Sample Box, containing a Quarter Gross Assorted Pens, sent post-free on receipt of seven penny stamps.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The Sun Eclipse of May 18, 1901, to be the Longest ever Known

*Total eclipses of the Sun, always occasions for stir in the astronomical world, have now-a-days hardly less interest to people in general, though in a different way.

*The present volume is not written for astronomers, much less for eclipse experts, but to give very unprofessional information to those without technical knowledge who are yet curious as to these strangely impressive phenomena—and with the hope, too, of creating further intelligent interest.

Extract from the Prefatory Note to 'TOTAL ECLIPSES OF THE SUN,' by MABEL LOOMIS TODD. (New and Revised Edition.)

Of the works of many of our modern authors, complaint is made now and again by the critics that they are colourless, or over-coloured, or falsely coloured, or that in some way or other the colour is wrong. And there can be no doubt that in many cases the critics are right. We have all come across descriptive passages in a story which the author obviously intended should charm our imagination, or harrow our feelings, which should make us burn with passion or anger, or freeze with horror, but which—don't.

All this can be altered. It is simply a question of treatment by Chromopathy or the new colour cure. An author has only to write under glass of the proper colour in order to produce the desired effect. We have to thank a publisher not only for a lively handbook to the cure but also for undertaking to supply the very simple apparatus required which may be safely stocked and sold by any bookseller.

* As to the apparatus required, several sheets of coloured glass (signal red, dark blue, yellow, purple, and signal green are the most useful), measuring about 10 inches by 12 inches, should be obtained, or where the symptoms are definite a single sheet will often suffice. The glass may be placed in a picture frame or simply hung up by means of string in the window where the sun comes. . . .

'Sit in the light for twenty minutes to an hour, this constituting a sun bath.'

For instance, suppose it is the case of an author whose work, perfect in other respects, is said by the critics to be wanting in colour in the emotional parts, the author has only to work up those parts while sitting at his study window exposed to sunlight coming in through a yellow glass. 'Yellow light is a capital cerebral stimulant'; unfortunately it 'also acts as an emetic,' which might be awkward. In the case of authors whose works exhibit a 'want of vitality'—not an uncommon complaint if the critics are to be believed—they are advised to work under the influence of red glass; they should also take 'a couple of tablespoonfuls twice a day, or as otherwise specified,' of water which has been exposed to light through a red glass. 'Where a large bottle, or a number, can be used, a bath in light-exposed water will be found very effectual.'

Poets, and others subject to morbid and hypochondriacal attacks derive great benefit from the violet treatment. 'Dr. Pouza, director of the lunatic asylum at Alessandria, Piedmont, placed a lunatic in a violet chamber, who lost his usual morbid taciturnity in three hours; another, an excitable man, who had been in a strait jacket, was much calmer an hour after being put in a blue one.' We are not quite clear whether the strait jacket or the chamber was blue, but it does not matter, 'clothing exposed to these coloured rays has a therapeutic effect according to the colour employed.' It has been erroneously supposed that calomel was the active ingredient in a 'blue pill,' but it appears it is the blue, and if your liver is out of order all you have to do is to wear a patch of blue glass over it, or take blue water and green rays.

'Baldness has been cured by the use of sunlight through blue glass.' (No wonder Sunlight Soap is so successful.)

'Paralysis requires yellow and white glass over the spine, red glass over the pit of the stomach, and a strip of yellow glass below that.'

It is all so simple.

'Headache, inflammation of the brain, nervousness, hysteria, palpitation, apoplexy, toothache, sunstroke, sciatica, neuralgia, tumours, hemorrhage, earache, itching, sore eyes, vomiting, sleeplessness, erysipelas, most fevers, and bubonic plague are amenable to blue light.'

It only shows how mistaken the world has been in not appreciating the therapeutic value of colour. In an article on 'Literary Genius and Environment,' in the March number of our lively American contemporary Literary Life we find this mistaken statement:

'Strange to say, many of the supreme names in letters prove that environment is of little or no account, either in the way of help or hindrance. Shakespeare was trained in the green room of a theatre.' Whereas Chromopathy clearly proves that the greatest of dramatists owed all to his environment; had he been trained in a red room, he would have been merely an anarchist probably.

'The Bladder. Inflammation can be cured by the use of blue water.'

For dyspepsia a good purple glass will be found to answer, allowing the light 'to stream upon the hypochondrium.'

But it would be unfair to Mr. Eaves, the author of 'The Colour Cure,' to dip too freely into his most instructive and entertaining manual—doubtless he and his publisher deserve and expect to make ex luce lucellum; in fact, on page 21, we find this 'note' which booksellers who want a lucrative agency should not overlook:

Application for terms should be addressed to the Publisher, 6 Henrietta Street, W.C. Arrangements have been made for supplying sheets of the finest glass (ten inches by twelve) in the following colours:—Deep blue [for blue-stockings?] orange, grass-green, and ruby-red.

'It will be apparent,' as the author remarks, 'that this treatment, unlike most, does not involve much expense; and, again differing from many régimes, the risk or danger attached to it is infinitesimal.'

What a chance for the booksellers. We fully expect to find the toast of 'Success to bookselling and the colour cure' proposed by Mr. Macmillan and responded to by Mr. Keay at the Publishers' and Booksellers' Dinner in May. With the 'net book system' and 'Chromopathy' all our fears for the future will be discounted, especially as we see that Mr. Wellby, the publisher, announces a new work by the same author, 'the object of which is to show that human life can be almost indefinitely prolonged, here and now.'

It is all a question of colour and proper optimism, and it is very refreshing to come across anyone so optimistic as Mr. Eaves in these days when so many of our morning and evening and other papers simply wallow in pessimism.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The King and Queen have accepted copies of Miss Marie Corelli's booklet, 'The Passing of the Great Queen,' published by Messrs. Methuen & Co., and have expressed to the author their great appreciation of this 'Tribute to the Noble Life of Victoria Regina.' The Empress Frederick has also written to Miss Marie Corelli, through Count von Seckendorff, to say how much she likes and values the book.

* 'The Colour Cure: a Popular Exposition of the Use of Colour in the Treatment of Disease.' By A. Osborne Eaves. London: Philip Wellby, 6 Henrietta Street, W.C.

His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of the volume entitled 'Sport in Europe,' edited by F. G. Atalo, which Messrs. Sands & Co. recently published.

'A Year in China, 1899-1900,' by Mr. Clive Bigham, C.M.G., late Honorary Attaché to the Legation at Peking, contains the fullest account yet published of the most exciting episode of the Chinese war—Admiral Seymour's attempt to relieve Peking with a composite column. Mr. Bigham, who took part in the expedition, has interesting things to say of the various contingents. He also saw something of the Russian campaign on the Amur, and travelled home by the Trans-Siberian Railway. The rest of his work is a shrewd and observant narrative of travel ranging over some 10,000 miles in the Chinese Empire, with remarks on many centres of European interest, such as Port Arthur. The book will be issued immediately by Macmillan & Co.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. have just published 'Queen Victoria, 1819-1900,' by Richard R. Holmes, Librarian at Windsor Castle, a new edition, with portrait, and supplementary chapter, bringing the narrative to the end of the Queen's reign; also a new novel, entitled 'Lysbeth: a Tale of the Dutch,' by H. Rider Haggard, with twenty-six illustrations by G. P. Jacomb Hood.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will issue immediately two volumes of 'Hints to Travellers,' edited for the Council of the Royal Geographical Society by John Coles. The volumes, which deal mainly with surveying, practical astronomy, meteorology, photography, medical and other questions of interest to the scientific traveller, have already run into eight editions under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will publish a week hence the first of the season's volumes in the 'Haddon Hall Library,' 'Cricket and Golf,' by the Hon. Robert H. Lyttelton. Many old cricket prints—of old-time cricketers and grounds—have been specially reproduced in facsimile colours, and the frontispiece in photogravure. There are also appropriate head-pieces to the chapters, designed by Arthur Rackham.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. publish a volume of sermons by Canon Armitage Robinson, nearly all of them preached in Westminster during the past two years. The title of the book is 'Unity in Christ.'

Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode are publishing an edition, limited to 5,000 copies, of 'A Memorial Issue of the Book of Common Prayer,' bound with 'Hymns A. & M.' In addition to the Victorian Edition of the Book of Common Prayer the book contains a fine portrait of her late Majesty in Woodburygravure, a coloured title-page, the Memorial Service as used on Feb. 2, 1901, &c.

'The Day-book of John Stuart Blackie: Selected and Transcribed from the Manuscript, by his Nephew, Dr. Archibald Stodart Walker,' is the title of a book which Mr. Grant Richards will publish immediately. It appears that throughout his life Professor Blackie had the habit of preserving in manuscript his random thoughts on life, character, literature, and general economics.

bicycle, as well as other valuable prizes. Chums is deservedly very popular with young Britons.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will issue shortly No. 3 of The Yorkshire Ramblers' Club Journal under the editorship of Mr. Thomas Gray.

Mr. John Hogg, 13 Paternoster Row, will shortly begin to issue a series of Technical Handbooks on the Artistic Crafts, suitable for schools, workshops, libraries, and all interested in the arts. The series will be under the general editorship of Mr. W. R. Lethaby, a director of the L.C.C. Central School of Arts and Crafts and Professor of Design at South Kensington. Each craft will be dealt with by an expert qualified to speak with authority on design as well as on workmanship. The volumes will be fully illustrated, and issued at a moderate price. Mr. Douglas Cockerell will commence the series with 'The Craft of Bookbinding and the Preservation of Books: a Text-book for Bookbinders and Librarians'; to be followed by Mr. H.

Wilson on 'Gold and Silver Smiths' Work,' and Mr. C. Spooner on 'Cabinet Making and Designing,' with others in due course.

Lord Wolseley, in a letter referring to Mr. Baird's 'Life of General Wauchope,' says: 'General Wauchope was a most gallant soldier, most loyal Scotsman, and disinterested public servant. I never knew a more honest man, a braver or a better soldier; I never had a truer friend, or one whose friendship I appreciated more highly. I feel his loss greatly, but that is little when compared with the loss which the army and the country sustained when he fell in the midst of those gallant Highlanders whom he loved so well, and by whom he was so justly valued and appreciated.' General Hector Macdonald also sends a high appreciation of the value of the work. 'The volume,' he says, 'is now going the round of eager readers, and is in much request in the Highland Brigade.' Mr. Baird's work, which is adorned with portraits and illustrations, is already in a third edition.

International Art Notes will, in respect of its April number, have quite a West Country interest, for, in addition to sketches of 'Old Bristol,' by Ernest Parkman, there is an illustrated article, 'In Cuckoo Time at Clevedon,' by H. S. Dymond Stuckey, and particulars of an 'Ornamental Structure' design prize competition connected with the last-named pretty seaside town.

'Shots from a Lawyer's Gun' is the title of a work written by Mr. Nicholas Everitt, to be published next week by R. A. Everett & Co., of Essex Street. The book will deal with sporting law, with illustrations drawn from actual experience.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish immediately a true romance by Mr. J. L. Lambe, a new author, entitled 'By Command of the Prince.' The story is founded on the remarkable career of Detcho Boytcheff, the son of a notorious brigand, who was befriended by Prince Alexander of Bulgaria, whom he afterwards treacherously betrayed.

The Macmillan Company publish a work which will be important to students of the American War of Independence—'The History of South Carolina in the Revolution,' by Dr. Edward McCrady.

'The Position in China,' by Professor R. K. Douglas, Professor of Chinese, King's College, London, is the title of an interesting article in the April number of the Humanitarian. An excellent portrait of the Professor accompanies it.

On April 25 will be published the first monthly part, price 6d., of Cassell's Family Doctor, edited by a Medical Man. This valuable work will be placed within reach of the public by means of this Serial Edition at less than one-half its present cost. A series of illustrations to form frontispieces to the parts will be prepared for this edition. To be completed in eight parts.

We have received from Messrs. Pickering & Chatto, 66 Haymarket, Part V., price 6d., of their new quarto Illustrated Series of Catalogues of their Old and Rare Books. This part contains two very fine reproductions in colour and gold, from two fifteenth-century illuminated manuscripts, 'Horæ Beatæ Mariæ Virginis.' These sumptuous catalogues are a delight in themselves; they make one covet a long purse and leisure.

The Macmillan Company publish a pocket edition of Poe's 'Prose Tales'—eleven in all—with a critical and biographical introduction.

Messrs. G. W. Bacon & Co., Limited, educational publishers, have declared a dividend of 9 per cent. for the half-year ended December 31, 1900, making 8 per cent. for the year; added £1,000 to the reserve fund, which now amounts to £5,000; and carried forward about £2,500.

'Glue, Gum, Paste, and other Adhesives' is the title of a most useful and well-illustrated little sixpenny brochure published by Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward, Ltd., 6 Farringdon Avenue. Many booksellers would be able with this manual to make and stock their own adhesives.

We have had so little spring so far that it is pleasant to know Messrs. Cassell will publish this week a Double Spring Number of the Gardener, which is to be of 'extraordinary attractiveness.'

'Anna Karenina,' to be published shortly by Mr. Heinemann, will form the first volume of a uniform edition of Tolstoy's novels to be translated direct from the Russian by Mrs. Constance Garnett, the translator of the complete edition of Turgenev.

Mr. R. B. Cunningham Graham in 'A Vanished Arcadia,' to be published shortly by Mr. Heinemann, gives a history of the work done by the Society of Jesus in South America, and more particularly in Paraguay. Mr. Cunningham Graham's long residence on the river Plate has given him valuable knowledge of the subject.

Uniform with their 'Mary Stuart,' 'Charles I.,' &c., Messrs. Goupil & Co. now announce 'Charles II.,' by Osmund Airy, M.A., LL.D., with about thirty full-page illustrations. An attractive prospectus of the work has reached us, with a very rich photogravure of King Charles II. as a chubby boy in armour, from the painting by Van Dyck.

Mr. E. B. Iwan-Müller, whose book, 'Alfred Milner and his Work,' will shortly be published by Mr. William Heinemann, was a friend of Sir Alfred's before they both went to Oxford. Sir Alfred and the author were successively, though at some interval, assistant editors of the Pall Mall Gazette.

Mr. F. James Gant, author of 'The Mystery of Suffering,' will publish shortly 'Modern Natural Theology with the Testimony of Christian Evidences.' The work, which contains an independent investigation of the subject free from technicalities, will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

AMERICAN ANNUAL CATALOGUES.

The 'Annual American Catalog' (* sic), published in New York at the office of the Publishers' Weekly and in London at the office of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, is well known to many English booksellers. In the current issue the list of 'books recorded in 1900, with full titles and descriptive notes arranged alphabetically by authors,' fills 266 pages, while the 'Index to the books of 1900, by author, title, and subject,' fills 240 pages. It seems that 1900 has been a 'record year' for United States book publication, American new books and new editions numbering 3,878, English &c. books published in the United States 1,388, and 'books in English imported in editions' 1,090—in all 6,356, against 5,321 recorded for 1899. In the 'English Catalogue of Books' for 1900 7,149 titles are recorded, including United States books published in England; but very many United States books imported into England have their titles given in the 'English Catalogue,' though those titles were not counted in computing the number 7,149.

There has reached us a 'Cumulated Index to the Books of 1900,' compiled 'under the direction of M. E. Potter,' and published at Minneapolis by H. W. Wilson. This closely resembles the 'Index' which forms the second part of the 'Annual American Catalog'; the 'Catalog Index' gives month of publication as well as year, and the 'Cumulative Index' occasionally gives a 'descriptive note' under an author entry, which the other index has no reason for doing, as such notes are given in the former part of the 'Catalog.' We have not before seen a copy of the U.S. 'Cumulative Index,' as it is termed on the page heads, though on the title-page it is 'Cumulated Index.' But it appears from the preface that this is the third volume. Curiously enough, the title of the preceding volume is not included in this index, so we cannot ascertain its price. The preface claims for this 'Cumulated Index to the Books of 1900' that it is the 'largest annual catalog which has yet appeared' in the United States, and that it contains 'about 9,000 author entries.' It certainly does include the titles of several 30 c. and other books, mostly periodicals, which are not recorded in the 'Annual American Catalog.' The 'Cumulated Index' has 386 pages and the 'Annual Catalog' 540 pages, not counting 62 pages of 'Publishers' Annual Lists.' Each of the two works contains a Directory of American Publishers.

TRADE CHANGE.

Messrs. Luzac & Co. have been appointed agents for the sale of the publications of the Imperial Academy of Sciences, St. Petersburg, and all the publications issued by this important press can be obtained from them.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 7.—WILLIAM HUTTON, F.A.S.S., of Birmingham, 1723-1815.
Concluded.

In a few weeks he was able to tell his brother who came to see him that his trade supported him. Five shillings a week covered every expense as food, rent, lodging, washing. 'Thus,' he says, 'a year rolled round when a few young men of elevated character and sense took notice of me, I had saved £20, and was become more reconciled to my situation.' In this beginning of his prosperity something happened which 'threatened totally to eclipse the small prospect before me.' The overseers, fearing that he may become chargeable to the parish, ordered him to procure a certificate or they would remove him. He wrote to his father to get one, and the reply came, 'that All Saints in Derby never granted certificates.' He was hunted by this ill nature for two years. He offered to pay the levies, which they refused. A new overseer, however, from whom he had bought two suits of clothes for £10, consented to take them.

The next year, 1751, he took the house adjoining that of Mr. Grace, the hosier, who had refused to employ him when he applied for work during his runaway week and to whom he had 'told several lies, and without the least advantage.' He was frightened at the rent, which was £8 a year. Here he pursued business in a more elevated style, and with more success. His new clothes introduced him to new acquaintances; it was at this time that he became acquainted with Mr. William Ryland, 'one of the worthiest of men,' he writes, 'with whom I contracted a close and intimate friendship which has continued forty-six years, and is only to be broken by death.'

In 1752 he had a smiling trade to which he closely attended. He hired out books, and 'the fair sex did not neglect the shop.' This hiring out of books was really the beginning of a Circulating Library, the first that had ever been established out of London.* As capital increased he opened a shop on market days at Bromsgrove, but found it did not pay and soon dropped it. He also took a female servant who was still less profitable, for during his absence she sold his books for what they would fetch, left the shop 'and got drunk with the money.' This year his neighbour Mr. Grace, being a widower, took his niece, Miss Sarah Cock, to keep his house.

The following year Mr. Hutton cultivated acquaintance with Miss Cock, and in 1755, June 23, he says: 'I awoke before seven and ruminating on the first object of my life I thought to myself "What am I waiting for? I have nothing to expect, no end to answer by delay; that which must be done may as well be done now. I will rise and tell my love she must be no longer single."' Mr. Grace interposed no obstacle, Miss Cock was 'willin,' so the marriage ceremony took place at St. Philip's Church. 'Thus,' says he, 'I experienced another important change, and one I never wished to unchange. . . . I found in my wife more than ever I expected to find in woman.'

In 1756 his wife brought him a little daughter, who proved to be the pleasure of his life. And now occurred an event which proved an advantageous change in his career. Mr. Robert Bage, a paper-maker, proposed that he should sell paper for him either on commission or on his own account. He found that he could spare about £200, so he chose to buy. He appropriated a room and hung out a sign, 'The Paper Warehouse.' 'From this small hint,' says he, 'I followed the stroke for forty years, and acquired an ample fortune.'

Mr. Grace died in 1757 and left him his residuary legatee, and his wife brought him a son. He now occupied Mr. Grace's house, and kept his own as a warehouse.

Prosperous times were now opening up for him, and in July 1758 his wife presented him with another son. I quote the following passage in full because it contains words of wisdom applicable to all times and seasons:

I perceived more profit would arise from the new trade than the old; that blank paper would speak in fairer language than printed; that one could only furnish the head, but the other would furnish the pocket; and that the fat kind would in time devour the lean. . . . Few men can bear prosperity. It requires a considerable share of knowledge to know when we are well; for it often happens that he who is well, in attempting to be better, becomes worse.

He concluded that, as there was a profit to the seller of paper, there must be to the maker, and so on this erroneous principle he longed for a paper-mill, and by degrees he became, as he says, 'mill mad.' In 1759, on taking stock, he had saved in the past year £137, exclusive of all expenses. By this time his property, exclusive of his furniture, was £777. But 1760 proved on the whole a melancholy year. His wife was afflicted with jaundice, one of his sons died, then he himself was brought low with the jaundice, and was for a long time between life and death.

The next year he was worried about his paper-mill. He had purchased two acres of waste land at Handsworth, and there he began to build; his workmen saw his ignorance, and 'bit me as they pleased.' They said, and acted up to the principle: 'Let us fleece Hutton, he has money.' He discharged them all, let the work stand, and left himself some rest. He was persuaded to convert what was never finished as a paper-mill into a corn-mill. He found that, as a miller, he was cheated on all sides. He sold it for eighty guineas, and found he had lost in cash £229. He was so provoked with his folly that he followed up his business with redoubled spirit, and soon he prospered; he had no rival, and, as he says, he struck the nail that would drive. 'I never could bear,' says he, 'the thought of living to the extent of my income; I never omitted to take stock or regulate my annual expenses so as to meet casualties and misfortunes.'

So far I have followed Hutton's progress almost year by year, but now that we find him fairly launched in a prosperous business it is unnecessary to do more than glance at him now and then till he reaches the final goal, and that is a long way ahead, for we have now accompanied him down to the year 1763, when he was only about forty, and he lived a vigorous life till he was ninety-two.

No sooner did he find himself on the high road to fortune by perseverance in his own trade, than he must needs become discontented: he had always a fondness for land and wished to call some his own. 'This ardent desire for dirt,' says he, 'never forsook me.' In the course of the next few years he bought and sold several small estates; sometimes he made large profits by these transactions, and not unfrequently considerable losses.

In 1768 he was chosen overseer of the parish of Birmingham and thought himself 'elevated above his ancestors,' for 'none of them within the reach of tradition had equalled it; they had rather been the poor than the overseers of the poor.' His property by this time had reached £2,000.

As an overseer he soon became very popular, especially among his brethren at the Castle—for by active conduct he did not only his own duty but a considerable part of theirs. He also acquired an amiable character among the dependent class, and his successor told him that he was 'the favourite of all the old women.'

In 1769 he bought land at Bennett's Hill near Washwood Heath, and there he built a residence for himself; he quitted the office of overseer, but his friend, William Ryland, dreading the office, gave him twenty guineas to serve for him, and so he had another year of the office, but he did not find this second year so pleasant as the first, so he took 'the tail end of an overseer no more.'

Ambition and the idea of being useful now spurred him on to enter public life. In the year 1773 he was chosen a Commissioner of the Lamp and Street Act, a position which he relished. His plan was to execute the Act with firmness but with mildness, but he soon found there were clashing interests among the Commissioners: some wished to retain their own nuisances; others to protect those of their friends—a rich man was also favoured beyond a poor one. He was blamed for some removals because he was a speaker, an advocate for impartial reform, and was not supported by his brother Commissioners; he lost some friends and so declined attendance.

The year 1779 was one of a series of misfortunes: the carpenter who was building his house cheated him heavily; a paper-maker compelled him to pay £30 for paper never received; many customers failed in his debt; one of his tenants broke, by which he lost several hundred pounds; the indisposition of his wife began which lasted seventeen years; his daughter was taken ill of a nervous complaint; he had an abscess in his throat and at length he broke out in boils.

In 1780 he says he was distressed in the midst of plenty. For nine months he was mostly employed in writing the 'History of Birmingham.' On showing it to Dr. Withering he pronounced it 'the best topographical history he had ever seen.' In the next year a new duty was put on paper, consequently an advance in price.

In 1782 he writes:

A man may live half a century and not be acquainted with his own character. I did not know I was an antiquary till the world informed me, from having read my history; but when told I could see it myself. The Antiquarian Society of Edinburgh chose me a member: and sent me an authority to splice to my name F.A.S.S.

In 1784 he lost his mother at the age of 87, and in 1786 he lost his sister, 'a woman of an extraordinary character and as amiable as extraordinary. Her age was 67.'

In 1787, being Master of the Rules in the Court of Requests, he wrote a full history of the process in octavo, being his third publication. This year he took his wife to Aberystwith, and on his return he walked from Aberystwith to Shrewsbury with his coat on his arm in two days and a half, the weather being extremely hot and the roads dusty; this laid him up for a month.

We now reach 1791; the year began prosperously but terminated in disaster. He writes:

My family loved me: were in harmony. I enjoyed the amusements of the pen, the court, and had no pressure on the mind, but the declining state of health of her I loved. But a calamity awaited me I little suspected. The Riots in 1791, which hurt my fortune, destroyed my peace, nearly overwhelmed me and my family, and not only deprived us of every means of restoring to health the best of women, but shortened her days. I wrote a history of that most savage event at the time, with a view to publication, but my family would not suffer it to see the light. I shall now transcribe with exactness the MS. copy.

And now follows 'A Narrative of the Riots in Birmingham, July 14, 1791, particularly as they affected the author.'

This narrative of the Riots occupies sixty-one pages of the book, and presents an interesting account of the Riots and the cause of them.

One of the causes thereof seems to have arisen from the members of a certain public library desiring to introduce Dr. Priestley's polemical works, to which the clergy were averse; this produced two parties, and its natural consequence, animosity in both. From this small beginning arose a general proscription of the Dissenters. A furious mob arose, calling itself champion of Church and King, which, as Hutton remarks, was composed of people 'who would have sold their King for a jug of ale, and demolished the Church for a bottle of gin.' Hutton was always of a peace-loving nature, and said that he was 'a firm friend to our present Establishment, notwithstanding her blemishes.' He had taken no part in these religious disputes, but he was known as a Dissenter and a friend of Priestley, and not a few of the rioters remembered him as Chairman of the Court of Requests who fined them or otherwise punished them for their misdeeds. They now seized the opportunity of revenging themselves. They attacked his business house in the High Street, threw his furniture and extensive stock into the street, and reduced the house to a skeleton. And, not satisfied with this diabolic deed, they went next day to his country home at Bennett's Hill, and burnt down the house and all its contents. What was not consumed in the fire was carried off by the rioters.

The fatal 14th of July was by far the most important era of my life. . . . A black cloud was raised over my head which the sun of prosperity can never disperse. I entered Birmingham July 14, 1741, as a runaway apprentice, without money, friend, or home. And that day fifty years began those outrages which drove me from it, and left me in a more deplorable state of mind than at the former period.

Many of his friends, Churchmen as well as Dissenters, offered him the use of their houses after the riots. It does not appear, however, that this cruel destruction of his property brought such absolute ruin upon him as he has described. His actual claim for loss and damages amounted to £8,243, and of this he eventually received £5,390. Besides he was in possession of a considerable amount of landed property.

In 1795 he purchased an estate in Herefordshire, and in 1796, January 23, his beloved wife died. Her loss was a very real and sore trial to him, but for this loss his latter days would have been ideally happy. He now transferred his business to his son, and during the next few years he occupied his time partly in writing poems and in travelling about with his daughter. He concluded the writing of the story of his own life in May 1798, when he was seventy-five, and then he began to write the history of his family. He performed most of his journeys afoot. One day he walked forty-six miles, the next ten miles and forty-two the third—and then he fell lame, having injured the tendon of Achilles—and so 'limped out of this year and limped into the next.' In 1800 he lost his brother aged seventy-eight, and 1801 his brother Samuel died at the age of sixty-seven.

My years run round like a boy who beats his hoop round a circle, and with nearly the same effect that of a little exercise. I rise at six in summer and seven in winter—march to Birmingham, two and a half miles, where my son receives me with open arms. I return at four or five when my daughter receives me with a smile. I then amuse myself with reading, conversation, or study, without any pressure on the mind, except the melancholy remembrance of her I loved.

This year he took his daughter to the Lakes and left her there whilst he took a walking tour to explore the famous Roman Wall. He crossed the kingdom twice in one week and six hours melted in a July sun. When he rejoined his daughter near Lancaster, he had walked 601 miles in thirty-five days—an average of over eighteen miles a day. In June 1802 the 'History of the Roman Wall' was published. He was now in his old age apparently as happy as could be. 'What is a happy life?' he says: 'Suppose a man endeavours after health, and, by a proper use of his animal powers, can at fourscore walk thirty miles a day. Suppose him, by assiduity and temperance, to have obtained a complete independence, that he can reside in a house to his wish, is blessed with a son and daughter of the most affectionate kind . . . would you pronounce this a happy man? That man is myself. Though my morning was lowering, my evening is sunshine.'

He was never more than twice in London on his own concerns: the first was in April 1749, to make purchase of materials for his trade amounting to £3. The last was in April 1806, fifty-seven years after, to ratify the purchase of an estate which cost £11,590. One laid a foundation for the other and both answered expectation.

In 1807 The Monthly Review, in reviewing one of his works, 'A Tour through Wales,' spoke of him as having 'at length taken a longer journey, the important details of which he will not transmit to us poor wanderers here below.' In reply to this he sent the editor a poem 'From my shades at Bennet's Hill, Aug. 13, 1807.' I may quote a verse as a sample:

Your work for July tells the world that I'm dead,
And have ceased to become an inditer,

But by praising my book, it will rather be said,
That you keep me alive as a writer.

In 1808 he supplies a list of all the books he had written in thirty years, viz. 'The History of Birmingham,' 1781; 'Journey to London,' 1784; 'Court of Requests,' 1787; 'The Hundred Court,' 1788; 'History of Blackpool,' 1788; 'History of Bosworth Field,' 1789; 'History of Derby,' 1790; 'The Barber, a Poem,' 1793; 'Edgar and Elfreda, a Poem,' 1793; 'The Roman Wall,' 1801; 'Tour to Scarborough,' 1803; 'Poems, chiefly Tales,' 1804; 'Trip to Coatham,' 1808 (all published by Nichols); 'Life written by Himself,' 1815 (published by Baldwin).

At the age of eighty-two he considered himself a young man, and could walk forty miles a day, but during the succeeding six years he began to feel a sensible decay; nevertheless, on Nov. 17, 1812, when he was eighty-nine, he walked twelve miles with ease, and on his ninetieth birthday he walked ten miles.

His daughter wrote a very interesting and touching account of his last days. He died Sept. 20, 1815, aged ninety-two.

His daughter closes her account with the following description of him:

My father was nearly five feet six inches in height, well made, strong and active; a little inclined to corpulence, . . . his countenance wore an expression of sense, resolution, and calmness, though when irritated or animated he had a very keen eye. Such was the happy disposition of his mind, and such the firm texture of his body, that ninety-two years had scarcely the power to alter his features or make a wrinkle on his face.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE M. SMITH.

It is with very great regret that we have to record the death, at the age of 77, of Mr. George Smith, head of the firm of Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., which took place on Saturday evening last, April 6.

For some years past Mr. Smith suffered from a complaint for which an operation was performed in January, and he had so far recovered that he was able to be removed to Weybridge about a fortnight ago; there he gradually sank, and peacefully passed away last Saturday. He was born on March 19, 1824.

It is quite unnecessary to remind readers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR how very intimately and prominently the late Mr. George Smith was connected with the literature of the Victorian Era; the names of Thackeray, Charlotte Brontë, Darwin, and George Eliot head the long list of writers of mark whose works were published by him and in many cases suggested by him, and with whom he was in most friendly relationship. Then, in periodical literature, few indeed are the enterprises which can point to such success as that achieved by the Cornhill Magazine, which was founded by Mr. Smith, as also was the Pall Mall Gazette.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE MURRAY SMITH

(HEAD OF THE FIRM OF MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & CO.)

On June 6, 1894, Mr. Smith was entertained at dinner by the contributors to his Dictionary—

'my idea,' as he called it—Mr. Sidney Lee, who was then editor of it, presided, and in proposing the toast of Mr. Smith's health gave the following admirable résumé of his life work as a publisher: 'Long before the Dictionary was thought of, Mr. Smith had aided in the production of great English literature more effectually than any man now living. This is the year of jubilee in Mr. Smith's distinguished career as a publisher, the year of his own jubilee; his firm is of older standing. Fifty years ago, in 1844, he issued the first publication for which he was personally responsible, Richard Hengist Horne's "New Spirit of the Age," to be followed next year by Leigh Hunt's "Imagination and Fancy.'" Before Mr. Smith took a foremost part in the operations of his firm, Smith, Elder & Co. had published in 1843 the first volume of Ruskin's "Modern Painters." That noble work was completed under our guest's auspices, and during nearly thirty years following he was responsible for the publication of the "Stones of Venice," and many other books by that champion of artistic truth. What Charlotte Brontë owed to the encouragement of her publisher no one who knows anything of literary history needs to be reminded. Charlotte Brontë, very soon after making Mr. Smith's acquaintance by letter in the way of business, was impressed by his considerateness, his courtesy, his enlightened discrimination, faculties which no one can know Mr. Smith long without recognising in him to-day. Hardly less classical is the story of Mr. Smith's relations with Thackeray. Mrs. Ritchie, Thackeray's daughter, has lately told the story in public of how George Smith—then (in Thackeray's words) "hardly more than a boy"—sought her father's acquaintance in a very handsome and spirited way, while he was writing "Esmond," and there and then laid the foundation of an intimacy which was only terminated by Thackeray's death. Equally honouring to the two men is the record of Mr. Smith's long association with Robert Browning, the poet. These names, Thackeray, Brontë, Browning, and Ruskin, are among the supreme names in English literature; of the bearers of them all Mr. Smith was more than publisher. Of Thackeray, Brontë, and Browning, Mr. Smith remained till their deaths the staunchest of friends and allies. To many other writers, less eminent than these, it is true, but certain none the less to fill a prominent place in the annals of modern literature, Mr. Smith has stood, or is standing, in a like relation.'

But the work which he himself said that none had afforded him so much interest and satisfaction was the great 'Dictionary of National Biography,' commenced in 1885 and completed in 1900; fortunate is the man who designs, carries on, and lives to see the finish of a national work of such magnitude. Mr. Smith not only did this, but at the great meeting at the Mansion House on June 29 last he received that public acknowledgment for his great services to literature which was their fitting reward.

In the course of his reply to the toast proposed by Mr. John Morley, who referred to the 'Dictionary' as 'boldly conceived, wisely planned, zealously and strenuously executed, and carried to a triumphant completion,' Mr. Smith said:

'He did not think that the proprietor or editors of a work of literature had ever before been entertained by the chief citizen of the greatest city in the world. He ventured to say that the Lord Mayor deserved the gratitude of all men of letters for the example he had given; and he hoped that his lordship had done something towards removing a reproach which had been cast on our country—that it never afforded any public recognition of literary enterprise, be it never so valuable or useful to the nation. If, however, the occasion were unprecedented, there was this to be said—that "The Dictionary of National Biography" was an unprecedented work. As far as he knew, no work of the like extent, involving so much laborious research, so much anxious care, had ever been produced in this country. And he ventured to predict that the dictionary would long remain a unique work. Eighteen years of unremitting effort, of continuous anxiety, to say nothing of fiscal considerations, were not lightly ventured on. As to the last point, he was told that there had been some curiosity, and he would so far take the present company into his confidence as to say that if anyone desired to produce a work of the like magnitude and of a similar character, he should be prepared for the expenditure of a sum which could not be stated under six figures, and the second figure must be a four or a five. If, first and last, he got back from the sales of the supposed work a sum equal to rather more than one-half of the amount of his expenditure, he might regard himself as fairly fortunate. But, after all there were things which could not have been accomplished by the mere expenditure of money, however lavish, and one of these things was "The Dictionary of National Biography." The dictionary was almost as interesting to a large proportion of the citizens of the United States of America—who find in it a record of the deeds of their forefathers—as to our own countrymen. He knew that the American Ambassador felt a genuine interest in their work. The dictionary would, Mr. Smith continued, never be superseded, it would last as long as the English language. So important and interesting a work would find a place in the literary history of our time, and when that history came to be written the significant fact that the Lord Mayor of London had assembled this distinguished company to celebrate the completion of the work would be recorded to his honour. It would be difficult for him adequately to express the gratification afforded to the editors and himself by that entertainment. He would not attempt to do so; he would simply offer to the Lord Mayor their warmest thanks for his splendid hospitality, and for the honour he had conferred on them.'

During the progress of the dictionary much other gratifying and similar testimony to its value was forthcoming, as has been recorded in our columns, and although it was not, as Mr. Smith pointed out, a commercial success, it is, and will for ever remain, a monument to the genius of one of the most enterprising and successful of publishers and genial of men.

THE CANNON HOUSE SWIMMING CLUB.

Members of the staff of Messrs. Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., and Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., have joined to form a Swimming Club to be called 'The Cannon House Swimming Club,' the object being to acquire the art of swimming, for life-saving, recreative, and racing purposes. We hope the club will get along swimmingly.

NATIONAL UNION OF TEACHERS' ANNUAL CONFERENCE AND PUBLISHERS' EXHIBITION.

Great Yarmouth has been honoured this year by being made the meeting-place of the Teachers' Parliament for the first time in its history. So far as accommodation is concerned many larger towns and cities hitherto visited will suffer by comparison. The Aquarium Theatre was used for the meetings. The smaller hall and numerous corridors were set apart for the Publishers' Exhibition. There were over 50 exhibitors, and at least 150 representatives and attendants. The exhibitors could not complain of the scarcity of visitors, except those whose lots were cast in out-of-the-way places.

At these gatherings interest is generally centred upon some new idea; this year is no exception to that rule—ambidexterity seemed to be the chief topic of interest, but the requisite books and apparatus were limited to one or two houses. Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., were showing three new books on the subject, which naturally came in for considerable attention. Two are by F. W. Lydon, 'Ambidexterity,' and 'Blackboard and Free-arm Drawing'; one by J. Tadd, entitled 'New Methods of Education.' Messrs. Charles & Dible were pushing some black carbon cardboards with metal rests, upon which pupils could practise the ambidextrous free-arm work. Messrs. Arnold & Sons, of Leeds, had something similar, as did Messrs. Geo. Philip & Son; these, however, upon comparison with the text-books, seem inadequate to the possible future requirements of teachers and pupils.

Chief among the exhibitors more directly connected with the business of publishing were Messrs. Longmans & Co., Cassell & Co., Macmillan & Co., Geo. Bell & Sons, Smith, Elder & Co., T. Nelson & Sons, Jarrold & Sons, Wm. Collins, Sons & Co., Chapman & Hall, A. & C. Black, Wm. Blackwood & Sons, Dent & Co., Pitman & Co., Religious Tract Society, National Society, Geo. Gill & Sons, G. W. Bacon & Co., W. B. Clive & Co., Oliver & Boyd, W. & R. Chambers, Blackie & Sons, E. Arnold, Educational Supply Association, Moffatt & Paige, and most of the other well-known educational houses and manufacturers.

In connection with the annual conference of the National Union of Teachers at Great Yarmouth this week the Publishers' Educational Representative Association held their fourth Annual Meeting and Dinner. Mr. George Hodges (Messrs. Chambers & Co.) was elected President for the ensuing year; Mr. George Slater (Messrs. G. Gill & Sons), Vice-President; Mr. Castle (Mr. E. Arnold), Treasurer; and Mr. W. H. Jennings (Messrs. Pitman & Co.), Hon. Sec., re-elected. A most encouraging and ably-written report was presented to the meeting by Mr. Jennings, from which it would appear that the results accomplished have more than justified the existence of the Association, one item of their successful work being the reduction in the charge for space at these gatherings from 7s. 6d. per foot run charged at the Swansea and Cheltenham Conferences to 5s. 6d. per foot at this. Benevolence has its place in the rules of the Association. Over £24 has been expended upon the needs of the family of a deceased member, and an outfit provided to enable a young son to make a decent start in life. The treasurer reported a balance in hand of over £4, and seven new members were elected.

At the Annual Dinner, held at the 'Star' Hotel on Tuesday night, the President, Mr. G. Hodges, took the chair. Interesting speeches were made by Mr. Robert Smith, Mr. Kenworthy, Mr. S. Meech, Mr. Chas. Castell, F.E.I.S., Mr. Frank King, and others. Messrs. Linney, Walker, and Piff had charge of the musical arrangements.

A WARNING TO BOOKSELLERS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—A person named MacDonnell, describing himself as the Librarian of the Thomas Street Public Library, Dublin, has been visiting several London booksellers, buying books on behalf of the library, taking delivery of them without payment, and then reselling them. These purchases are repudiated by the Library Committee, and steps are now being taken to prosecute the offender.

The detective in charge of the case suggests that the trade, both in this country and abroad, should be warned, and their help towards his detection obtained.

Yours faithfully,

HENRY SOTHERAN & Co.

IN MEMORIAM.

CHARLES HENRY TANNER.

We regret to record the death of Mr. C. H. Tanner, a partner in the firm of Taplin & Tanner, booksellers, stationers, and printers, Jewry Street, Winchester. Mr. Tanner, who for the last two years has been in failing health, died on Saturday, March 30, in his fifty-fifth year. He was educated at Trafalgar House, Winchester, and in 1858 became captain of his school. In 1859 he started his business career under his father, the late Mr. William Tanner, senior, of the City Cross, and published for many years the Quarterly Record. Afterwards he became partner in the firm of Tanner & Sons, booksellers, stationers, and printers, who for many years published the Winchester Herald. Mr. Tanner has always taken a deep interest in all Church and Sunday-school work &c. He joined the Volunteer Force soon after its formation, and won many prizes for shooting. He was also amongst the picked contingent who went to Belgium and were fêted by the King. He took a strong interest in all local matters, and was widely known and greatly respected for his quiet, courteous, and gentlemanly habits. He was a member of the Voluntary Schools Council and of the Primrose League up to his death. Mr. Tanner leaves a widow and family of six to mourn his loss. His brother Mr. F. G. Tanner is at Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.'s, and is well known to the book trade in town and country.

AN ANCIENT GOOD FRIDAY CUSTOM.

In accordance with a custom so old that no record is left of its origin, twenty-one deserving old widows of the parish of St. Bartholomew-the-Great, Smithfield, were summoned yesterday to the churchyard to receive a new sixpence each. The only condition attending the gift was that each recipient should pick the coin from an ancient tombstone, and as many of the widows were suffering from infirmities of age the operation was of a somewhat arduous character. This curious custom was to a certain extent revived by the late Mr. J. W. Butterworth, publisher, of Fleet Street, who invested a small sum which placed the distribution beyond dispute. The distribution was preceded by a short service in the church of St. Bartholomew-the-Great.

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN AMERICAN BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATION.

As well as a very strong Publishers' Association the American book trade has now an organised Booksellers' Association, and already more than 750 booksellers have joined. Mr. Henry T. Coates has been elected President, and Mr. Chas. W. Burrows Vice-President, for 1901.

BRIGHT'S STORES, LIMITED, BOURNEMOUTH.

The directors of Bright's Stores, Limited, Bournemouth, congratulate the shareholders on the result of the last balance sheet, which certainly is a very satisfactory one, as, after paying directors' fees, dividends on debentures, and preference shares, they are able to pay 5 per cent. on the ordinary shares, and carry forward nearly £500.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'Laureata: a Book of Poetry for the Young,' edited by Richard Wilson, B.A. In this well-printed volume Mr. Wilson has brought together some hundred and fifty entire poems or extracts from poems representative of the best or most widely celebrated writers of English verse and of others less known to fame. For 'Laureata,' albeit not a big book, is no conventional volume of elegant extracts, but shows a truly catholic taste, and a study of its contents must surely be a liberal education in English poetry. Among the poets seldom found in such collections is Robert Southwell, in general but little known save as a writer of hymns, which are sometimes viewed with suspicion as having a Jesuit for their begetter. Here, too, we find Austin Dobson's 'Before Sedan,' W. E. Henley's 'England and Echo,' William Morris's 'Song of Orpheus to the Argonauts,' from 'Jason,' Swinburne's 'Child's Song and Child's Laughter,' and Rudyard Kipling's patriotic 'Song of the English.' 'Laureata' is called a book of poetry for the young; but as people are said to be as young as they feel, there can be no manner of doubt that it may be read with pleasure and profit by young and old.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'Dr. Somerville's Crime,' by Maurice H. Hervey ('Arrowsmith's Bristol Library,' Vol. lxxxv.). There is one advantage about Mr. Hervey as a writer of sensational fiction—he stands at no trifles. All his good characters are good to the extent of simplicity, whilst the bad personages seem by comparison perfect marvels of unmitigated vice. In his present story we have a private detective of so conscientious a nature that he hesitates to receive money which he has not fairly earned; the landlady of an hotel at Southampton—portly of course as all such beneficent beings are—who immediately succours the distressed daughter of a Rajah who has followed her lover from India; a wonderful variety agent who obtains £60 a week, with a subsequent offer of £80 and more, for the inexperienced Rajah's daughter as a dancer at the Alhambra; and finally a lurid villain who hypnotises the hero, and, finding that he is unexpectedly dead, flings his body into the Thames. And then the surprise so daringly sprung upon the reader at the conclusion of the story, when the itinerant news vendor, Daft Billy, turns out to be the character so disappointingly lost in the narrative! But it is only after we have breathlessly scurried through the book that we can thus calmly criticise. We recommend all our readers to undergo a similar process; the story is perhaps not high art but distinctly stimulating.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Running Amok: a Story of Adventure,' by George Manville Fenn. It may seem ungrateful, after spending a very pleasant couple of hours over Mr. Fenn's book, to turn round and say that the story stands much in need of compression, but such is the fact. A good deal less of the careless chatter through which the narrative is so garrulously unfolded, and rather more solid description, would have been all the benefit in the world, as affording contrast. As it is, the reader is inclined to get slightly bored with the constant stream of small talk, and it needs all the exciting events with which the story is so plentifully supplied to carry him in eager pursuit of the hero's experiences to the close. These same events are of such a character as will readily appeal to the sympathies of the younger generation, and the imaginative boy will no doubt overlook flaws of construction that are apparent to the more matured critic. All the trouble arises from a matter of stolen treasure in the Malay Peninsula, and the efforts of a party of South Surrey Rangers who go up country, under the guidance of a treacherous Rajah, to recover it. They are successful in the long run, and the villainous Rajah, who has now become a Sultan, terminates his existence by 'running amok.' Hence the title of the book.

From Mr. W. B. Clive.—'The Preceptors' Bookkeeping,' by Thos. Chalice Jackson, B.A., LL.B. In the preface to this excellent manual the author expresses regret that bookkeeping occupies such an inferior place in the curriculum of secondary and middle-class schools, and states that the bulk of the instruction in that art is given in evening classes and evening continuation schools. We learn that no fewer than 22,018 students enrolled themselves for tuition in bookkeeping at the evening continuation schools of the London School Board alone during the winter session of 1899-1900, and out of a curriculum embracing nearly seventy subjects bookkeeping was third in popularity, being only surpassed by arithmetic and shorthand. This judicious choice of subjects for study speaks well for the practical good sense of the students attending these evening schools, for whose use this text book is primarily intended and by whom it will most undoubtedly be found helpful. That bookkeeping should occupy a less prominent place in middle-class schools is not surprising to us. In our days it was taught in such a perfunctory way that it was almost impossible for a schoolboy to take interest in a subject which seemed uncongenial to the teacher, and which he had to learn from text-books very different indeed from that before us. For Mr. Jackson's book is in all respects well done; while the diagrams and figures illustrating it add to its interest and value.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Greek and Roman Mythology and Heroic Legend,' by Professor H. Steuding. Translated from the German and edited by Lionel D. Barnett, M.A., D.Litt. This is a careful translation of a valuable work, and is a worthy addition to the useful series of 'Temple Primers.' As Dr. Barnett truly says in his preface, there are few more instructive studies than that of the gods of Greece and Rome; and yet, he adds, 'this study has met with little recognition of late years in England, if we can judge by the number of reasonably scientific books treating of it.' This ought certainly not to be. Because, quite apart from the inherent advantages of such study, it is difficult for those who do not possess at least some knowledge of Greek and Roman mythology to fully enjoy our own British classical authors whose writings contain frequent references to mythological personages. Therefore this useful volume should have a large sale. It is almost superfluous to add of a volume of the 'Temple Primers' that it is well printed and illustrated, and has a full index.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Cruel Calumny and other Stories,' by Mrs. Leith Adams (Mrs. De Courcy Laffan). The pleasant, wholesome style of Mrs. Leith Adams is very apparent in this collection of short tales, and her cheery, unaffected method of narration will carry the reader to a very pleasurable height of interest. 'Cruel Calumny' is the story of a man who, in protecting a woman from her drunken, infuriated husband, inflicts a deathblow on him, and is afterwards accused of doing it intentionally. The actual originator of the foul report meets with his just reward, but it is then too late, the unfortunate wife having committed suicide.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Aldershot and London.—'Military Law Made Easy,' by Major S. T. Banning, R. Munster Fusiliers. Major Banning, already so well known to military readers by his useful and practical works on Military Organisation, Regimental Duties, and other subjects, now contributes to that excellent series, Gale & Polden's 'Military Manuals,' an admirably systematised account of that portion of military law necessary to be known by officers reading for the Promotion examination. The author advises all officers to consult those official books 'The Manual of Military Law' and 'The Queen's Regulations'; but adds that an experience of over ten years has convinced him that these volumes are rather confusing to a student, especially if working alone. Hence the book before us, for the writing of which no one could be better equipped than Major Banning, who was formerly an Instruction Officer in Ireland, and who is now Instructor in Military Law at the Royal Military College. The manual is supplemented by fully answered examination papers, and is provided with a good index.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'Tangled Trinities,' by Daniel Woodroffe. It is not altogether easy within small compass to do full justice to Mr. Woodroffe's story. It is replete with such clever and eloquent matter that only frequent extract could make the reader thoroughly sensible of its many attractions. The narrative opens amid laughter and ends in inexpressible gloom. Long after we have laid the book down the character of 'Asta Steele, with its barbaric animal tendencies and utter want of humour, lingers in the memory and tinges the mind with sadness. Asta is the daughter of a country vicar, himself with black blood in his veins. Her early life has been spent at St. Lucia, and she has come to this country, to the uncongenial surroundings of a rural parish in Kent, accompanied by her old negro nurse, Judith. Asta certainly does not share her father's religious convictions. To her everything is a mystery, which all her efforts at elucidation fail to solve. On all sides she sees people practising one thing and professing another. Even her father is a little afraid of those searching primeval questions which, as he says, are the result of a half known, half assimilated religion, and so trying to answer. In her sullen attitude towards her surroundings she is powerfully supported by Judith—a delightful character, whose quaint humorous observations of the local phases of life are effectively contrasted with the darker side of her influence over her unfortunate mistress. The story ends naturally, but, as we have said, in deep shadow. A thorough man of the world, Colonel Skene, pleasure-loving and selfish, enters into Asta's life. He is attracted by the originality of the girl and her half savage, untamed condition, and he foresees a possible development of much beauty. Then at an officers' ball, to which he has invited the simple-minded vicar and his daughter, he slights her. Two years later he meets her again at Havre, at an hotel where he is staying with his sister. The vicar by this time is dead, and Asta has drifted away from her English relatives. Reckless at her failure in various vocations of life, she is on the point of accompanying the Grand Duke Paul Nikolaeff to his villa at Trouville, and nothing but an offer of marriage from Skene can save her. After a hard struggle he determines to take this step, but the negress Judith, who, in her ignorance, anticipates a career of much splendour for her mistress with the Grand Duke, interferes, and the letter containing the proposal never reaches its destination. And so poor Asta goes to her fate. After all, what could one expect? In the words of Mr. Rudyard Kipling which grace the title-page, 'To my own gods I go. It may be they shall give me greater ease than your cold Christ and tangled Trinities.' Finding it impossible to understand the problems of life as interpreted by Christians, Asta has simply relapsed into barbarism.

From Mr. R. Brimley Johnson, 4 York Buildings, Adelphi.—'A Wanderer: from the Papers of the late H. Ogram Matuce,' by C. F. Keary. This little volume is one to slip into the pocket of your smoking coat or travelling bag, to be handy when a spare half-hour makes itself felt. We should gather from the editor's note that 'Ogram Matuce' is but a shade, or nominis umbra, on which Mr. Keary hangs his own clothes. Be this as it may, these travel-pictures will well repay perusal. They are dedicated to 'whosoever has been a thrall to monotony, who has felt but has not hugged his chains, plying, it may be in the dust and din of cities, the wretched penman's trade.' . . . The writer would have us think that after years of dull work in city pent he had earned the means to take a year's holiday, and he spends it wandering about on the Continent in unconventional fashion. Goethe and the glamour of German forest and mountain take hold of him so well that the echoes we get from his pages sound clear and true. There are some attractive pictures of English friends who have got buried in old German towns and live on hopes and memories and the pittance they can earn by teaching English and Latin. The style of 'A Wanderer' is finished, and as far from that of the guide-book and globe trotter as well may be; the booklet is full of interest for lovers of nature and human nature, and has a pleasant note of melancholy sounding through its pages.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Master Sinner: a Romance,' by a Well-known Author. This is a clever but unpleasant book. Anthony Grigg, an eccentric philosopher, resided in a tumble-down garret in the neighbourhood of Drury Lane, with his sole friend and companion, a man of considerable and highly-cultivated genius, one Thomas Trelawny. They were desirous of becoming sages and judges of humanity; and, with this object in view, had in their young days drunk deeply of the joys, sorrows, godliness, and depravity of human nature. Having succeeded in their object, they next tried to solve the problem of creation—but failed. 'They could disprove much, but they could prove nothing.' Thus they became Agnostics, and so remained;

'laughing to scorn every preconceived notion of Heaven and Hell, of Everlasting Life, of the Re-incarnation of Souls, of anything save Death.' Trelawny says one day to Grigg in jest: 'When I die, if the event happens before you shake off mortality for dust, I will send you a series of letters from Hell.' The next morning Trelawny is found lying dead upon the sheetless mattress, and on the anniversary of his friend's death Grigg finds the first of the promised letters from Hell. What is the nature of these letters, what their effect upon Grigg, and what becomes of that sordid individual must be sought for in the book itself. Painful as is the subject-matter of 'The Master Sinner,' it is as difficult to lay it down before having finished its perusal as it is to deny the power and ability with which the story is told.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'Practical Organic Chemistry for Advanced Students,' by Julius B. Cohen, Ph.D. Prof. Cohen in the volume before us gives an enlarged and rewritten edition of his work published in 1887. The preparations have been revised, many new ones added, and some former ones omitted. The chief additions are chapters on organic analysis and molecular weight determinations, and an extension of the appendix. The author tells us that, while not aiming at being a complete laboratory guide, it is intended as a systematic course of practical instruction, illustrating a great variety of actions and processes with a very moderate outlay in materials and apparatus. He states in his preface that one of the most familiar and most readily procurable of all organic materials is placed beyond the reach of many students because of the heavy duty levied on it; and he makes an appeal to the Board of Inland Revenue to provide institutions for higher education in science with a limited quantity of alcohol duty free, and thus place schools of chemistry in this country on the same footing with similar institutions on the Continent. This useful manual is well printed and illustrated, and provided with a capital index.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'Cities and Citizens; or, Britain's Next Campaign,' by the author of 'A Colony of Mercy.' This is practically a plea for the earnest consideration of a great social question—the treatment in our large towns of the poor and homeless. The whole of the Uitlander population of the two Republics in South Africa, on whose behalf we have recently made such enormous exertions, the author points out, is under 200,000; our own 'Uitlanders,' the 'Overcrowded Fifth of London,' are five times as many. In 1895 no less than seventy-one deaths in the Metropolis were registered as directly due to or directly accelerated by starvation. The question, therefore, is one of urgent importance. Miss Sutter relates her investigation of the 'Elberfeld system' of poor relief. Elberfeld, it may be mentioned, is a manufacturing town of considerable size in the Ruhr valley of Rhenish Prussia. Here, thanks to the efforts and business capabilities of Daniel von der Heydt, a complete system of helping the poor by their wealthier brethren has been instituted, each citizen taking his fair share of the work and responsibility. Something similar is also in use at Leipzig. Other chapters of the book are devoted to a consideration of the cause and care of homelessness, the cankerworm in ourselves, and the influence of the churches on the slums. The author sees a panacea for the wretchedness she deplores in a General National League of Help, which would not be a society, but rather a gathering up of societies into one national effort, having its branches all over the land. Such a league would not seek to lessen public responsibility, but it would be a union of responsibilities, 'gathering them into one equalising and overlapping whole,' and it could have 'associates in private individuals' to any number all over the country, and through these would have an eye on all beggars, on all labour-seekers, on all loafers and discharged prisoners, on every tramp on the highway. 'We should be sorry to throw cold water on any effort for the amelioration of the condition of the poorer classes, but we are afraid a national league of the description proposed in the very magnitude of its undertakings would be doomed to failure.'

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'A Secretary of Legation: a Tale of Zafia,' by Hope Dawlish. The disposition of Henry Dale, the hero of this novel, would be more interesting were it not for a certain air of supercilious conceit that runs through his conversation, and the highly-toned selfishness that distinguishes his actions. However, we are quite willing to believe that both these characteristics are natural to the younger members of the diplomatic service, and are thus true to real life. Dale, when attached to the Embassy at Budholm, has had experiences with one of the opposite sex, as, naturally, such a good-looking, self-possessed young fellow would have; in his case she was the beautiful presiding genius, not to say 'decoy,' of a fashionable gambling saloon. Five years later, when appointed Second Secretary of Legation at Zafia, after an intermediate diplomatic career at Washington, he is greatly surprised to find 'Bella Donna,' as she was called, the wife of the first Secretary of the Legation, Mr. George Trehearne. She speedily shows him that the past is forgotten and done with, so far as any tenderness for himself is concerned; but, unfortunately, there is still embedded in her disposition a partiality for gambling. How this subsequently shows itself, involving the helpless Second Secretary in its coils, the story goes to show, and we shall be forgiven for not relating. Suffice it that not only 'Bella Donna' and the Junior Secretary are implicated, but the sweet girl he is engaged to and the unfortunate husband; while the exposure is brought about by a peevish old maid to whom Dale has shown some attention on the voyage out, and who now revenges herself for his supposed desertion. The story is effectively written and has many telling situations.

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott.—'Martyred Missionaries of the China Inland Mission,' edited by Marshall Broomhall, B.A. In his preface to the volume before us, which he has ably edited, Mr. Marshall Broomhall sketches the history of the China Inland Mission, founded in 1865. Until 1898 its members had travelled in every direction through all the interior provinces of China, and had carried on for many years settled work in fourteen provinces without one single member of the Mission suffering death from violence or accident during the long period of thirty-three years. The first to suffer was Mr. Fleming, murdered in November 1898 in the province of Kueichan. During the crisis of 1900 the Mission suffered most heavily of all the Societies. Of the one hundred and twenty-seven adults and forty-four children known to have been killed among the Protestant missionary societies, the China Inland Mission has lost fifty-two adults and sixteen children. It is difficult to give an adequate idea of the variety of interest enshrined in the pages of this often sad and yet consoling record of the martyrdom, perils, and sufferings of missionaries suddenly called upon to testify to the truth of their religion with their lives, or who, having escaped death, had to suffer from cold, hunger, and sickness. We must refer the reader for details of murders, torturings, or hairbreadth escapes from death to the volume itself, which opens with a valuable contribution to the history of the crisis in China, and enumerates its probable causes and issues. Then follow accounts of the various missions and their experiences during the crisis, which abound in interest. The work forms a handsome demy 8vo. volume of 360 pages, beautifully printed, handsomely bound, and illustrated with twenty-five pages of portraits on art paper, and two maps.

From George Newnes, Ltd.—'The Story of Art in the British Isles,' by J. Ernest Puythian. This little manual forms one of the series called 'Library of Useful Stories' and is addressed to those who, having made little or no study of art or its history, wish to know the part it has played in the history of England 'and to form, as part of the equipment of a good citizen, some estimate of the place it ought to take in any civilisation worthy of the name.' The author's knowledge of his subject and his experience of audiences at art lectures enable him to impart in an attractive manner the information he wishes to convey. We should think this interesting and handy volume well calculated to arouse and stimulate an interest in art. There are 28 illustrations some of which are very good and helpful but those contained in the first four chapters are rather crude and far below the level of the rest.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Chaplain at the Front: Incidents in the Life of a Chaplain during the Boer War, 1899-1900,' by Owen Spencer Watkins, acting Wesleyan Chaplain to H.M.'s Forces. It has been our fortune to read many books about the Boer War, books of varied interest and value; but amongst them there are few so distinguished by modesty and manliness as Chaplain Watkins's plain unvarnished narrative. He had taken part in the Nile Expedition of 1898, of which he wrote and published his experiences, and at the opening of his book before us he says that many even at that time had foretold the Boer War but they were not heeded. 'I well remember hearing a toast given in an officers' mess in the heart of the Soudan twelve months before, "Here's to our next meeting in the Transvaal."' The author was in garrison at Malta when he received orders to leave by the first troopship for Natal and in the last week of September 1899, sailed in H.M.S. troopship 'Jelunga' on the way to Crete to pick up the Rifle Brigade and from thence through the Suez Canal, down the east coast of Africa to Natal. War had not then been declared and it was not till they reached Zanzibar that they learned the welcome news. 'The enthusiasm on board became intense; officers and men alike were in a state of wild delight and talked of nothing else.' On arriving at Durban the author started with the troops for Ladysmith, whither they were all ordered at once. The author's first experience of fighting in South Africa was the battle of Lombard's Kop, where a shell burst amongst the horses and his horse bolted mad with fright. He gives a telling description of the coolness and bravery of our artillerymen, whose guns were out-ranged by the huge cannon of the Boers; 'and the result was that they had to advance very close in order to reach them—had to come, in fact, into the zone where the Mauser bullets as well as shells pattered around them. . . . The hail of projectiles into which they advanced almost baffles imagination. . . . He could understand that in the noise and rattle the fully occupied gunners did not realise the heroism of what they were doing: 'But when I saw twenty yards in the rear the drivers in charge of the horses and limbers I was filled with amazement. They had nothing to do but to sit their horses and watch the fight; they could see the full peril . . . yet they sat under that terrible fire calmly smoking their pipes and chatting. . . . Time and again their horses were killed . . . yet without exception they were unremoved.' Then comes the terrible disaster of Nicholson's Nek and then the long weary siege of Ladysmith, scenes in the hospital and with the Boers when the author is sent to tend our wounded and bury our dead. All these scenes and incidents are well described but without straining after effect. The terrible Boer attack on the morning of January 6, 1900, when Boers and British were inextricably mixed together and men of both sides were shot by their own comrades, is graphically related. And after it was over, when they looked at the Boers slain, they saw that 'all were either advanced in years or mere youths. The old men, we have since learned, were the very men who in 1881 shot down our troops on Majuba, and they had thought to do the same at Ladysmith. It was a tragic sight to see the white-headed patriarchs with flowing beards, lying dead side by side with mere boys. The one seemed too old to be engaged in such grim work, the other far too young. We could not but admire their bravery, but when we saw the explosive sporting bullets that many of them carried, and the awful wounds they caused on many of our poor comrades, we could not regret their end. As they were carried down the steep to their comrades waiting below, our men muttered ugly words under their breath, and from their hearts all pity was gone.' And no wonder! one may add. The eleventh chapter: 'What Tommy thought of it,' containing the experiences and opinions of convalescent soldiers told by them in hospital after the relief of Ladysmith, ought to be read by everybody. We have no space to comment on the chaplain's further experiences up to October 19, 1900, when the Natal Field Force, to which he was at that time attached, ceased to exist as a separate force. The volume is illustrated by forty-seven photographs including a portrait of the author, and deserves a very wide circulation amongst all classes.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'The New Master,' by Arnold Golsworthy, with many illustrations by Tom Browne. The New Master, who rejoices in the uncommon name of Smith, tells his own story, and begins by informing the reader that, Dr. Boucherby having offered him the post of assistant master in his very select school for the sons of gentlemen, he had accepted it; or, in his own words, 'closed on the offer.' The Doctor, who must have been a very confiding schoolmaster, 'required the help of a worthy young man of education, with a pure white moral character.' 'I am,' says Mr. Smith, 'just that kind of person. My education stretches from the Græcæ Grammaticæ Rudimenta to halfpenny nap; and my moral character is such that in all the years I have used it I have never been found out.' Strange to say, although possessed of such excellent self-credentials the New Master has ultimately to leave. His experiences at the school are amusingly related, and the boy characters and Miss Boucherby are ably delineated. There is more use of the cane than we had thought obtained in present-day schools; and surely such treatment as the French master experienced is almost past belief. But then we are not quite sure if this story be intended as an exposure of middle-class schools or simply as a burlesque. If the former, we should think the Roman History lesson overdone; if the latter, the lesson is depressing rather than enlivening; but the Geography lesson is very funny. The book will doubtless afford entertainment to many readers, by whom Tom Browne's illustrations are sure to be highly appreciated.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The Rifle Brigade,' by Walter Wood. This forms the first volume of a series of military histories which Mr. Walter Wood has undertaken to write in order to supply a gap in the published records of the regiments forming the British army. These records, as Mr. Wood tells us, are mostly contained in a series compiled by the late Richard Cannon, of the War Office, consisting of about sixty volumes published between 1837 and 1851, when the issue was discontinued. Several regiments were not included in this series. Mr. Wood's series is called 'British Regiments in War and Peace,' and in it he will endeavour to claim the interest of the general reader without neglecting the natural demands of the regiments for perfect accuracy. He begins his undertaking with the Rifle Brigade, one of the most famous and popular corps in the British army and which recently celebrated the centenary of its existence. It was formed at the suggestion of Col. Coote Manningham and of Nelson's friend, Lieut.-Col. the Hon. Wm. Stewart, in January 1800, when the Duke of York ordered that detachments should be chosen from fifteen line regiments and formed into an experimental corps of riflemen; but these detachments still remained on the strength of their corps and were clothed by their respective colonels. In October 1800 the Rifle Corps was reorganised and officially gazetted. Since then and before—for it was first engaged at Ferrol, August 25, 1800—it has fought in many important engagements in both hemispheres, and has lately suffered severely in the war in South Africa. In the book before us Mr. Wood has written an admirable and spirited recital of its daring deeds and invaluable services, which often, as at Waterloo, helped to turn the scale.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Rodney Stone,' by A. Conan Doyle. This is a new and cheaper edition of Dr. Conan Doyle's rattling good story, 'Rodney Stone,' which needs no fresh recommendation. Still we may say to those who have the pleasure of reading it yet to come that they will be vastly interested and amused by its perusal. It seems almost a pity that the author should have thought it necessary to quote authorities. When we have partaken of a dainty dish, it adds nothing to our relish of it to be afterwards told of the ingredients used in its confection. Mr. Sidney Paget's designs thoroughly well illustrate the book.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Another English woman's Love-Letters,' by Barry Pain. In a preface, apparently written as a quite needless justification for this amusing burlesque, Mr. Barry Pain protests that the popularity of the book he so cleverly ridicules had made two questions wearisome to him. 'I was and still am tired of being asked whether the letters are genuine; and I hope I may be spared the nauseous problem as to the precise degree of consanguinity, if any, between the separated lovers.' . . . 'And of course the publication of the fooling which follows . . . answers the first of these two questions.' And, we may add, very 'excellent fooling' it is. We once knew a husband who invited his mother-in-law to his house for a few days. But she came to stay. He had literary proclivities, and threatened to write a book to be called 'A Short Way with Mothers-in-law.'

Whether for this threat or some other his mother-in-law left his house one day shaking the dust off her feet. So the book remained unwritten, and it will never now be known what the world gained or lost by the unfulfilment of the husband's threat. All we know is that the lady in question resembled this one described in Chapter IV.: 'You told me, dearest, I should find your mother formidable. I did; if anything, you understated it. She is a person very much in the grand Berserker style. I admire it, but it comes a little heavy at an afternoon call. It seems to check anything that could be called expansion. Do you think you were quite wise to leave her to come alone? It seemed to me that she should always have one or more attendants. I am told that some of the private asylums are quite comfortable, and trouble is taken to make the patients happy. . . . Do be kind to her. Kindness, a strait waistcoat, and six easy lessons in how to behave at tea are what she wants. . . .' It is very seldom indeed that one comes across a book so thoroughly enjoyable as this, for which readers who can enjoy mirth are under an obligation to Mr. Barry Pain.

From Messrs. H. Virtue & Co. (Art Journal Office).—'The Paris Exhibition, 1900,' edited by D. Croal Thomson, assisted by Herbert E. Butler and E. G. Halton. It would be difficult to imagine a more exhaustive and realistic description of the great exhibition of last year than is given in this handsome volume. The illustrations alone are a complete revelation, while the letterpress touches every subject of interest. Among the contributors of signed articles, in addition to the editors, are M. Antonin Barthélemy, M. Armand Dayot, M. Arsène Alexandre, Mr. Lewis F. Day, Mr. Joseph Pennell, Mr. Claude Phillips, Mr. Charles Quentin, and Mr. R. Davis Benn, who have each taken charge of the sections with which their reputation is best identified. There are also twelve separate plates from pictures by Sir Joshua Reynolds, M. Nicholas Lancret, M. Constant Troyon, Mr. Arthur Hacker, Mr. J. McNeill Whistler, and others. The volume forms a most exquisite portfolio of illustrations which should recall many pleasurable memories to those who visited the exhibition, and that will certainly convey a very life-like impression of the scene to those who were unfortunately unable to do so.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Edward Blake, College Student,' by Charles M. Sheldon. As a story Mr. Sheldon's work is a little unsatisfying, though in other respects it possesses interest enough. The desire to emphasise the religious teaching of the book has overbalanced the author's sense of proportion. The hero, Edward Blake, is simply the clothes-horse upon which Mr. Sheldon displays his views, and in the end we are left in complete doubt as to the future of all the chief characters, whether they carry out their good resolutions, or what becomes of them. The purpose of the book would seem to be to show that no matter how high the moral principles of a man may be, he is lost without the humanising influence of religious conviction. Edward Blake, during his college career, is animated by the most conscientious scruples; he is frequently checked in his actions by a sense of moral wrongdoing; but—he is not a Christian. To us he appears a most atrocious young prig, and in this light he may be held up as a lesson to all readers. The book is full of very wholesome teaching, and the admonitions of the author addressed to his hero may profitably be taken to heart. So-called principle and selfishness are often extremely closely allied.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—'What is Christianity? Sixteen Lectures delivered in the University of Berlin during the Winter Term, 1899-1900,' by Adolf Harnack, translated into English by Thomas Bailey Saunders. Professor Harnack treats the question embodied in the title of this book from a purely historical point of view. His lectures in their entirety form a masterly argument on behalf of Christianity. First taking up the main features of Jesus' message, the author then proceeds to consider the Gospel in its relation to certain worldly, social, legal, industrial, and doctrinal problems. The remaining part of the book is devoted to a survey of the Gospel in history—that is to say, in the Apostolic age, in its development into Catholicism, in Greek Catholicism, in Roman Catholicism, and in Protestantism. He concludes a volume which is extremely interesting and earnest throughout with these pregnant words: 'Pure knowledge is a glorious thing, and woe to the man who holds it light or blunts his sense for it! But to the question, Whence, whither, and to what purpose? it gives an answer to-day as little as it did two thousand years ago. It does, indeed, instruct us in facts; it detects inconsistencies; it links phenomena; it corrects the deceptions of sense and idea. But where and how the curve of the world and the curve of our own life begin—that curve of which it shows us only a section—and whether this curve leads, knowledge does not tell us.' The wisest course is to be guided by the higher dictates of our nature, and in this spirit to study the development of the history of mankind, obtaining such lessons from it as shall increase our faith.

NEW EDITIONS.—To their new issue, in a uniform binding, of Mr. Marion Crawford's works, Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have added 'Paul Patoff,' by many people considered one of the most powerful of the author's works. We may again call attention to the excellent printing and attractive get-up of this edition, and readers who have yet to make acquaintance with one of the most fascinating novelists in the English language could scarcely do better than do so under the present conditions.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

BOSTON NO LONGER A 'HUB.'

The news comes from America that Boston is no longer a 'literary centre' or even a 'hub.'

We on this side the Atlantic have been so accustomed to connect Boston with books, as the Alma Mater in fact of American literary life, that it comes as a shock to hear that the glory has departed, though as long as the famous city lasts there must ever hover over her the ghosts of departed greatness, the spirits of Longfellow and Emerson, of Holmes and Hawthorne and Lowell, and all that band of brothers who placed America in the front rank of literary nations.

But there is still hope for Boston: this cry of 'Ichabod' comes from her rival 'New York'—purse-proud, prosperous, but ever in her heart jealous of her little sister 'brainy Boston,' and ever glad of a chance to say things.

'Boston once' (says Harper's Weekly) 'claimed, with justification, to be the "literary centre" of the United States. It was also designated as the "hub of the universe," but this appellation was more than irreverent; it was almost ribald, and was never countenanced by the favoured ones who lived in the shadow of the gilded dome.

'The era unfortunately has passed. Boston has ceased to produce. She is no longer a "literary centre," or even a "hub"; but, thanks to the unquenchable spirit of Puritan ancestry, she is Boston still; and though she has ceased to exude it, she not only knows real literature when she sees it, but she wants it distinctly understood that she knows that she knows it. Witness a recent report of the "examining" and "reading" committees (consisting chiefly of Boston literary ladies) charged with the solemn duty of accepting or rejecting books submitted for places on the high and honourable shelves of the Public Library. With those "accepted" we need have no concern, for we know that they will bear scrutiny of the keenest. But solemn lessons may be drawn from the list of those "rejected," and we consider it our duty to lift the bushel and let the light diffuse its critical rays over the face of the land.' Here are the titles of some of the books recently put under the ban:—

Mary E. Wilkins's 'The People of Our Neighbourhood.'

Maria Louise Pool's 'Friendship and Folly.'

Sir Walter Besant's 'The Changeling.'

Lillian Bell's 'Instinct of Stepfatherhood.'

Captain Charles King's 'A Wounded Name.'

Amelia E. Barr's 'Trinity Bells.'

Henry James's 'The Two Magics.'

Egerton Castle's 'Young April.'

R. W. Chambers's 'The Conspirators.'

John Kendrick Bangs's 'Idiot at Home.'

Edith Wharton's 'The Touchstone.'

Molly Elliot Seawell's 'The Loves of the Lady Arabella.'

Robert Barr's 'Jennie Baxter, Journalist.'

Jules Verne's 'An Antarctic Mystery.'

Maarten Maartens's 'Her Memory.'

Kate Upson Clark's 'White Butterflies.'

It appears that dear old David Harum had, in the mercantile note of the New York organ, 'a close call.' Mr. Howells's 'Their Silver Wedding Journey,' although sat upon by these Boston maidens, was let in by a back door to a secluded place in the 'General Catalog'—'Catalog' will show how deep Boston has sunk.

It cannot be said that the Boston ladies—mostly maiden—have not the courage of their opinions, the courage which 'once forced their lords and masters to make tea in Boston harbour.

They make no concealment of the reasons for their decisions, as will be seen from their published records in the Boston Transcript:—

Of Robert Grant's 'Unleavened Bread' the judgment is that it is 'A very disagreeable and excellent story against women's clubs, written with the intense purpose that self-deception should be unmasked; a severe indictment of political manipulations and private interests.'

Of 'To Have and to Hold' that

'It would have been much stronger and would have kept much more of its early dignity if some of the agony had been reserved for another occasion.'

Of Henry James's 'The Soft Side,' that it is 'An interesting puzzle for one who cares to see how a clever writer can hide plot, expression, style, clearness, and force under a rubbish-heap of senseless words. Mr. James's recent work has dealt with an unworthy society, the class which makes one constantly doubtful of their intentions to fill their moral contracts and obligations. They are people one gains nothing by knowing, and one feels disgust at the waste of so much literary skill, while admiring the ability which makes the characters themselves show forth their sordid qualities. It is not diamond cut diamond. It is rather a flashing diamond used to cut muddy crystals which are full of flaws.'

D'Annunzio's 'glorified sensuality' and ecstasy on every page until one becomes weary of rhapsodies,' and Corelli's 'turgid literary style interlarded with poor French and Italian,' receive passing notice, but the stern rebuke administered to Mr. James on his native heath seems to afford a fitting climax, although we must not ignore the information that Mrs. Humphry Ward has 'an unsettled mind,' and that "Eleanor" would not be good for girls,' who 'would be casting about for Manistys, as girls of a bygone time looked for Rochesters.'

'While it is not well known who the members of the Reading Committee are [says the newspaper report], the following are understood to be included: Mrs. L. Parker, Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Coleman, Mrs. Robbins, Mrs. Cabot, Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Mrs. Wheelwright, Mrs. Wells, Mrs. Frothingham, Miss Katherine Conway, Miss Chase, Miss Dewey, Miss Page, Miss Sever, Miss Ranney, and Miss Adams.'

This is the only information given regarding the committee, and the masculine Harper's Weekly asks questions which nothing but distance gives it the temerity to print—fancy asking about the colour of the stockings of the ladies of a city where even the 'legs' of tables are not mentioned!

'This information about the committee is inadequate to a degree, leaving one's mind unsatisfied and filled with a longing for more. That the majority of them are young we know, because they are not married. But are they red, white, or blue stockings? Do they approve of the "straight military fronts"? Do hoops still gallop in the east wind? Who of the committee was permitted to revel in "glorified sensuality" until she became "weary"? And who, pray, is the girl of a bygone time who still cherishes a dissatisfied recollection of looking in vain for the dead and buried Rochester?

'We respectfully but firmly suggest the printing of portraits of the members of the committee—in the Transcript, if necessary, but preferably in the "Catalog."'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

His Majesty the King has just bought a picture in Bayswater under circumstances of more than usual interest. During the Crimean War in 1855, under the ægis and ever-thoughtful care of our late revered Sovereign, most of the members of the Royal Family contributed pictures by their own hand, which were sold for the benefit of the widows and orphans of those who had fallen. One of these works by the Princess Royal, now the Empress Frederick of Germany, was entitled 'The Battlefield,' and attracted much attention at the time. It represented a woman bowed down in grief over the prostrate form of a dying warrior, with tents and other features of a camp in the distance. This picture was purchased for the sum of five hundred guineas by the late F. H. Dutton, Esq., in whose family it remained until it came into the possession of Mr. FitzNorman Ellis, of the Elysée Art Galleries, Queen's Road, Bayswater, where it has been recently exhibited. Mr. Ellis was honoured by royal command to submit the same to his Majesty, who was much interested; recalling, as it vividly did, to his memory the days when this picture was painted by his sister's gifted hand. The King decided to acquire it, being reluctant to let this touching souvenir of the Empress's earlier years pass into the hands of strangers.

General Sir H. E. Colville is engaged upon an important book describing 'The Work of the Ninth Division,' which will be published by Mr. Edward Arnold next month. General Colville includes a brief account of the operations under Lord Methuen for the relief of Kimberley, in which he was engaged prior to the formation of the Ninth Division, while subsequent chapters deal with the capture of Cronje at Paardeberg, Sanna's Post, the Lindley Affair, and numerous engagements in which the division took part.

Mr. E. Marston has in the press, in a collected form and with additional matter, the series of 'Sketches of Booksellers of other Days' which have been appearing in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. The list includes Jacob Tonson, Thomas Guy, John Dunton, Samuel Richardson, Thomas Gent, Alice Guy (afterwards wife of Gent), William Hutton, and James Lackington. The volume will be dedicated to the Booksellers of To-day, and it will contain portraits of the booksellers sketched. The size of the volume will be fcap. 8vo., beautifully printed at the Chiswick Press, and will sell at a very moderate price.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a new edition of Major-General Baden-Powell's 'Matabele Campaign' at 6s., with all the author's original illustrations. General Baden-Powell has sent over from the Transvaal a highly interesting and characteristic preface, in which, writing with the sound of the field guns in his ears, he compares the Matabele and the Boer campaigns, describes their points of similarity, and suggests the lessons which the present campaign has given observant soldiers in the art and practice of war.

The literary agent is said to have his uses—although there are some notable publishers and editors that doubt his beneficent purpose. At all events, he seems to have taken up a permanent place amongst us, and so we note the addition of another recruit to his ranks—Mr. Stanhope Sprigg, who has acted for some time as the literary editor of the Daily Express and who has just resigned his appointment to set up in the literary agents' business at 110 St. Martin's Lane, W.C. Mr. Sprigg has more than a bowing acquaintance with books and journalism. For some years he was one of the principal editors employed by Messrs. Harmsworth, for whom he wrote some of their most successful serial stories. He left them to join the staff of Messrs. Ward, Lock & Bowden, as it was then, and he became the first editor of the Windsor Magazine. He also had charge of Sylvia's Journal for a period and compiled three popular handbooks for Messrs. Ward & Lock on 'Games and Pets' that ran into a circulation of many thousands. He has received the promise of some powerful support from some of our best-known novelists in his new venture and ought to do well in consequence.

Mr. R. B. Marston has been re-elected Honorary Secretary to the Council of the Publishers' Association for the ensuing year.

A new and cheaper edition of 'The Life and Letters of Edward Bickersteth, late Bishop of South Tokyo,' by the Rev. Samuel Bickersteth, will be published immediately by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

The same publishers have ready 'The Green Horse in Ladysmith,' edited by Lieut.-Colonel St. John Gore. It is a record of the part the 5th Dragoon Guards took at the battle of Elandslaagte and while besieged in Ladysmith, the chapters being contributed by officers and non-commissioned officers of the regiment.

Miss Honnor Morten is editing for Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. a new edition of the famous 'Love Letters of Abélard and Héloïse.'

A new novel by Mr. R. S. Warren Bell, the author of 'Bachelorland' and 'The Papa Papers,' is to be published shortly by Mr. Grant Richards. It is entitled 'Love the Laggard,' and has for its cover a design by Mr. John Hassall.

Mr. F. Bauermeister, Foreign Bookseller, 49 Gordon Street, Glasgow, announces Part I. of 'Atlas of Rare Ophthalmoscopic Conditions and Supplementary Plates to the Atlas of Ophthalmology,' by Dr. J. Oeller, Professor in the University of Munich; also 'Atlas of Diseases of the Nose,' containing 356 figures of 475 separate drawings in 38 plates, by Hofrath Dr. Robert Krieg.

The second volume of Captain Philip Hore's 'History of the County of Wexford' is nearly ready for publication. It will contain the history of the districts of Tintern Abbey, Rosegarland, and Clonmines. The work is compiled from ancient records and state papers, notably at Canterbury and Cambridge. It will be illustrated by many views of ancient buildings, plans, seals, and facsimiles of original documents which have been reproduced especially for this work. It will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

The Fabian Society is shortly to inaugurate, by the publication, through Mr. Grant Richards, of a volume 'Trusts and the State: a Sketch of Competition,' by Mr. Henry W. Messrs. Harper are shortly publishing 'Understudies,' by Mary E. Wilkins (the author of 'A New England Nun' and 'Jerome'). This is a collection of stories in which the author has conceived the idea of taking certain animals and flowers and using their characteristics as material for short love stories, the central figure in each story being shown to resemble such animal or flower.

The Rev. J. Hackett, B.D., Chaplain to the Forces, has written a history of the Church of Cyprus, which will shortly be published by Messrs. Methuen. This work is an attempt to bring together all that is known of the subject of which it treats. The book will be provided with two maps, showing the extent of the former Latin and present Orthodox dioceses respectively, as well as with photographs of some of the chief ecclesiastical buildings in the island taken by the author himself.

'There is an enormous demand for postage stamps in the United States. The new law requires that there be kept constantly on hand at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington, 100,000,000 two and 20,000,000 one-cent stamps. Heretofore there has never been any difficulty in maintaining this reserve. The demand recently, however, has increased so rapidly that the number of two-cent stamps in the reserve has been increased to 150,000,000, and the number of one-cent stamps to 36,000,000. The Treasury Department has decided to increase the hours of work in the postage stamp division of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to prevent further encroachment upon the reserves.—Creyer's Stationer.

Messrs. Marion & Co. are issuing an interesting and life-like portrait of her late Majesty Queen Victoria, seated at a table in the open air, at work with her correspondence, her faithful Hindoo in close attendance. The size of the plate is 9 in. by 11½ in., it is finely printed in photogravure and mounted, and should be very popular.

The next volume in Messrs. Methuen's 'Standard Library' is Swift's 'Journal to Stella,' which Mr. G. A. Aitken has edited with an introduction and copious notes. The text has been very carefully revised with the text in the British Museum.

Miss Daisy Hugh Pryce has rechristened her forthcoming novel which Messrs. Greening & Co. have in hand. Her new story will be called 'The Power of the Past,' instead of 'Miss Tankerville,' as originally announced. The action of the story takes place in Egypt amid the Pyramids.

A new volume of the series of Mr. Grant Allen's Historical Guides is shortly to make its appearance—'The Cities of Northern Italy,' by Dr. G. C. Williamson, who is already well known for his handbooks to Italian art. In this volume Dr. Williamson has followed closely the plan for the series as it was originally mapped out by Mr. Grant Allen. He describes at length Milan, Verona, Padua, Bologna, Ravenna, Brescia, and Ferrara.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will add to their 'Temple Classics' in a fortnight 'The Natural History of Selborne,' by Gilbert White. The new edition has been edited by Mr. C. Weeks, with notes and marginalia, and in the text reproductions of Bewick's old bird-drawings have been inserted.

The 'Twentieth Century Cookery Book,' by Mrs. Aronson, who writes for the Sydney Mail under the nom-de-plume 'Thalia,' is being published here by Mr. Fisher Unwin this week. Besides a systematic and extensive collection of recipes, the book gives much useful information concerning domestic management, home decoration, and such like matters. Where necessary, the book has been illustrated.

English publishers who are solicited to buy American books because they have had an enormous sale in the United States, should not take it for granted that it is a proof of the books' merit, even from the mere selling power point of view. We are informed that some phenomenal sales which have been widely puffed are due to big purchases by 'dry goods stores,' and concerns of that kind, which have bought very largely at little over cost, and sold at cost, or under, as an advertisement to 'boom' themselves.

Mrs. Sarah A. Tooley, whose 'Biography of Queen Victoria' is now in its third edition, has written a 'Life of Queen Alexandra,' which will be published serially in the Woman at Home magazine, beginning with the May number. Mrs. Tooley has collected fresh and interesting material in Denmark from those intimately associated with the early years of Queen Alexandra.

The Pall Mall Magazine has an exceptionally attractive bill of fare for May, including 'The Voyage of the "Ophir,"' poem by George Meredith, illustrated by Patten Wilson; 'Submarine Boats,' by 'One who has sailed in them,' illustrated by Henry Austin; and 'Behind the Scenes of the Royal Academy Exhibition,' by M. H. Spielmann, illustrated by Lewis Baumer.

The problem of the personality of Shakespeare is discussed from a new point of view in a work to be published on the poet's birthday (April 23) by Messrs. Greening & Co., 'The Messiahship of Shakespeare, sung and expounded by Clelia' (Charles Downing). The author regards the poet 'as the Messiah, dreamt of by Ibsen in his "Emperor and Galilean."'

MARK TWAIN.

Mark Twain has told countless good stories about the various people he has met and his experiences with them, but here is a story which, so far as we know, he has never told, and which has not been printed before.

He once had an engagement to lecture in a small town in—say—the Western Reserve, and was met at the railway station by the minister, as the leader of intellectual society in the place. The minister welcomed the distinguished visitor, and as they walked up to the parsonage where Mark was to be housed and fed during his stay, his host conversed on several topics, and finally said: 'Mr. Clemens, it has always been our custom, in this little town, to open every entertainment given here with prayer, and I should like to do so to-night, if agreeable to you. Would you have any objection to my doing so?' 'Why, my dear sir,' replied Mark warmly, on the contrary, it will give me great pleasure—I should be very glad to know that the lecture was going to be started right, anyhow.'

So, with this understanding, they went to the lecture-room that evening, and the minister left the lecturer sitting in the corner of the platform, took the centre of the stage himself and proceeded to offer a prayer about half an hour long, in the course of which he gave his views on all the current affairs of interest, and concluded by saying: 'And now, O Lord, we have with us to-night a man who is known throughout all the world as the great American humorist. Help us, O Lord—help us to understand what he is about to say to us, and to be amused by it; and, if possible, grant that we may derive some real benefit from his lecture.'

Major Pond has wisely said of Mark Twain that he is as great a philosopher as a humorist, but if Mark were to own up, he would probably say that he needed all his philosophy to pull him through the next few minutes.—Scribner's Book Buyer.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 8.—JAMES LACKINGTON.

James Lackington wrote an account of the first forty-five years of his life in 1791, a second edition of which was published in 1794. It is from this edition that I have gathered matter for the present sketch. The title is as follows:

MEMOIRS
OF
JAMES LACKINGTON.

THE PRESENT BOOKSELLER IN CHISWELL STREET,
MOORFIELDS, LONDON.

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

IN FORTY-SEVEN LETTERS TO A FRIEND, WITH A TRIPLE DEDICATION.

1. To the Public.
2. To Respectable } Booksellers.
3. To Sordid }

A new edition, corrected and enlarged; interspersed with many original humorous stories, and droll anecdotes; not in former editions.

James Lackington writes with great facility, and with no want of vigour, but more than half of the book is made up of flippant attacks on Methodism, of 'humorous stories' which are not particularly humorous, and of droll anecdotes, the drollness of which consists mainly in their indecency.* Apart from these distinct blemishes, however, there is a great deal of matter in the book which may be regarded as both interesting and instructive.

JAMES LACKINGTON'S earliest days were very much like those of his contemporary William Hutton (see Sketch No. 7); the one was starved and shivered in a silk mill, his father was a sottish stocking-weaver, the other was the son of a drunken shoemaker.

Lackington was born at Wellington, in Somersetshire, August 31 (old style), 1746. Like many other human beings, he was inclined to boast of the antiquity of his family, for, although his father was a journeyman shoemaker, one of his ancestors gave the name of White Lackington to a village in Somersetshire where the family had settled. His grandfather was a gentleman farmer, at Longford, near Wellington; he was a man of considerable property. He bound his son apprentice to a Mr. Hordley, a master shoemaker in Wellington, with the intention of setting him up in that business, but when he had worked a year or two after his apprenticeship as a journeyman he greatly displeased his father by marrying Jane Trott, a young woman of 'a mean family,' and without a shilling.

Our hero, James, the first-born and hope of the family, was born in the house of his grandmother Trott. Jane proved to be an excellent wife and a most admirable mother, and by the time she had borne her husband three or four children the grandfather so far relented that he supplied his son with money to open a shop for himself; but no sooner did he find himself more at ease than he contracted the fatal habit of drinking, and, although his father made several fruitless attempts to keep him in trade his habitual drunkenness soon reduced him to his old state of journeyman shoemaker, from which he never emerged, and he and his large family were involved in the extremest poverty.

To their worthless father the children, now increased to eleven, owed no debt of gratitude, while to their good mother they were indebted for everything. For many years together she worked nineteen hours out of the twenty-four to feed her children and supply her miserable husband with drink. His drunkenness shortened his days, and when he died his family were thankful that the source of their poverty was taken out of the way.

For the first few years the father had been a careful hard-working man, and James, being the eldest son, was put for two or three years to a day school, and used to astonish several ancient dames by his wonderful memory which enabled him to learn chapters of the Bible on hearing them read and repeat them perfectly though he never learnt to read; but it soon came to pass that the poor mother could afford no longer to pay twopence a week for his schooling, and he had to take the place of nurse to the younger children. He soon forgot the little he had learnt, and instead of learning to read it became his chief delight to excel in all kinds of mischief.

When he was about ten years old, a man began to cry 'Apple pies' about the streets, and he thought he could do it much better; he was accordingly sent to live with a baker, and he cried 'Pies' for him so vigorously that the old pie-man had soon to shut up his shop, and he was the means of extricating his master from embarrassing circumstances through the immense number of pies he sold for him; but he soon began to play such tricks among the old women that the baker had to discharge him. He then had to sit down and work at his father's trade.

At the age of fourteen and a half he was bound apprentice to Mr. George Bowden and Mrs. Mary Bowden, shoemakers, of Taunton, 'as honest and worthy a couple as ever carried on trade.' They carefully attended their shop six days of the week, and on the seventh they went with their family to an Anabaptist meeting, where excellent morality was taught, but little attention was paid to speculative doctrine.

During his apprenticeship he had as his companions two of his master's sons; the eldest, about seventeen, had heard and was converted by one of John Wesley's itinerant preachers. He set about to convert his parents and his brother, and eventually James himself became a member of the Wesleyan body—from which he eventually broke away for a long time, and henceforth at least one half of his book is filled with sneering, contemptuous, and, as it seems to me, vulgar and contemptible attacks on that most respectable body of Christians, and especially on John Wesley himself. More than once during his career was he reconverted only to relapse, and it was during these relapses that he indulges in his offensive sarcasms, which only show much crass ignorance, abounding self-conceit, and an assumption of superior knowledge, which he boastingly regarded as 'broadminded philosophy.'

These dreary and needless discussions are certainly a great blot on his book, and in his latter days he was utterly ashamed of them. I wholly object to him as a teacher of 'broadminded philosophy.' He only learnt to read during his apprenticeship, and to write some time afterwards. When he could read he became a great reader; he read every book he could get hold of. He had an excellent memory, and whilst he remained a member of the Wesleyan body he accumulated books suitable to his profession, and soon considered himself quite master of the various arguments made use of by polemical divines; but, gradually getting rid of these leading strings, he studied Plato and Seneca, and Plutarch and Epicurus, and other of the old pagan philosophers, and all the modern ones, such as Voltaire, Tom Paine, &c., and so he soon found himself fully equipped as against what he now looked upon as the narrow-minded teaching of John Wesley.

It does not seem, however, to have been his study of philosophy that first caused him to break away from Methodism. It happened that just about the time when he had reached his twenty-first year, and near the end of his apprenticeship, the election occurred of two Members of Parliament for Taunton, and he, having obtained his freedom from his mistress, was soon launched into the midst of scenes of riot and dissipation. He had a vote, and being as he says 'possessed of a few ideas above those of my rank and station, my company was courted by some who were in a much higher sphere,' and 'here,' he says, 'I had nearly sunk for ever into meanness, obscurity, and vice, for when the election was over I had no longer open houses to eat and drink at free of cost.'

It was this dissipated life that first caused his backsliding, and doubtless the 'superior' learning he got from his philosophical books led to his final emancipation.

I can find no admiration for him as a philosopher, as he was pleased to call himself. His book, which contains over 500 pages of text, as I have said, only brings down the story of his life for forty-five years. It is so largely made up of scornful abuse of Methodism and of long irrelevant stories, many of them vulgar and indecent, that it is not easy to follow the thread of his life therein. The volume is also brimful of poetical quotations. He seems to have had, or thought he had, the art of finding an apt quotation for every incident of life. I will attempt to dig out from the great mass of matter he has written sufficient to give an intelligent sketch of him as a bookseller. In this capacity he assuredly exhibited very great ability; he was honest, fearless, straightforward, and clear-headed. Starting as a bookseller, in utter ignorance of all the old rules and customs, and in defiance of them, he invented an entirely new system of his own, and in this he persevered, always honestly and honourably till it led him on to fortune. His success was of course greatly due to his own perseverance, but more perhaps to the fact that he had, accidentally as it were, hit upon a new line of operation, and success followed because it was new.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—I should be glad if you will allow me to call the attention of publishers to this undertaking, and more especially to the Anthropological section of it. The catalogue, which is to be issued under the direction of the Royal Society, is designed to form, for the use of scientific men, a permanent record of the articles and books containing material of scientific value which appear from 1901 onwards.

In the Anthropology section this material is found, not only in works devoted to the discussion of anthropological questions, but also in all books of travel &c. which contain descriptions of physical characters, language, beliefs, &c., of peoples, more especially of the non-Europeans.

It is obviously in the interests of publishers that the works which they issue should, if suitable, appear in a standard work of reference such as the International Catalogue, which will be used in every civilised country in the world. Both in the interests of publishers and of the catalogue therefore I shall be glad if you will call attention to the steps necessary to ensure the inclusion of a book. Works intended for inclusion in the Anthropological section of the International Catalogue must be sent to the Anthropological Institute, 3 Hahover Square, W. They must have been published in England after the close of 1900, and be of the nature above indicated. Books so sent will be treated as works sent to the Institute for review in the Journal, but if a book is found unsuitable for inclusion in the catalogue it will be returned if a request to that effect be inclosed with it.

I am, &c.,

NORTHCOTE W. THOMAS.

A CORRECTION.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—In the Preface of Mr. Kernahan's new book of Essays from the Nineteenth Century, National Review, &c., the author states that he has not issued a new book for four years, whereas, as you are aware, we recently published a book by him entitled 'Scoundrels & Co.'

The explanation is that Mr. Kernahan believed we are issuing his Essays before his novels, as was our intention, had not 'Wise Man and a Fool' been delayed in order to secure American copyrights.

We are, Sir,

Yours faithfully,

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

The Hundred and Second Annual Meeting of the Religious Tract Society, which is to be held in Exeter Hall, at seven o'clock, on Friday, May 3, promises to be of altogether exceptional interest, and the Society has secured a strong list of very capable speakers. The chair will be taken by the Rev. F. B. Meyer, whose name is well known on both sides of the Atlantic, and who has returned from his recent American trip just in time for this meeting. The list of other speakers includes Messrs. Frank T. Bullen, the author of 'With Christ at Sea,' and Stanley P. Smith from China, also the Revs. J. D. Jones, of Bournemouth, and E. J. Kennedy, whose work in connection with the Y.M.C. Association has rendered him popular among a very wide circle of young men and Christian workers.

Probably no May Meeting this year will exhibit a more varied or striking series of speakers.

PRESENTATION.

Mr. James Smith, the esteemed representative of Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co., has recently ceased visiting Scotland on business, owing to slightly impaired health.

We learn that the booksellers in that country embraced the opportunity of showing the high esteem in which they held Mr. Smith by presenting him with an illuminated address couched in highly appreciative terms.

MR. JAMES SMITH.

Of Messrs. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co.

The address was beautifully bound in polished morocco and signed by all the leading members of the trade in the various places formerly visited by Mr. Smith. Such a compliment is quite unique, and doubtless will be very highly prized by the recipient.

We trust Mr. Smith may soon regain his usual health in his partial retirement, and that he may be known as one of the leading representatives in trade for many years to come.

A HINT TO PUBLISHERS.

'The PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR raises the old question of cut versus uncut edges. Most people, we imagine, will agree that the modern style of gilt tops and untrimmed sides is both the most artistic and the most convenient. The labour of the paper-knife is compensated by the appearance of the page, whilst the gilt top prevents that accumulation of dust which is always a reproach on books innocent of the binder's knife. But we do wish to protest against the practice of some publishers in sending uncut copies of books for review. Really it is not fair either to the reviewer or the book to expect him to waste half-an-hour of his time in cutting the pages. It is a direct incitement to him to proceed to "cutting up" the book. A few firms recognise this, and review copies of their uncut books are sent out after treatment. Would that all did likewise.'—THE WYNBERG TERMS.

MESSRS. THOMAS NELSON & SONS.

The marriage took place at Edinburgh, on the 9th inst., of G. M. Brown, Esq., M.P., to Miss Mary E. Nelson, younger daughter of the late Thomas Nelson, Esq., publisher. Mr. G. M. Brown is the managing trustee of the business of Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons, publishers, of London, Edinburgh, and New York. The staffs of each of these establishments sent a wedding present—from Edinburgh a magnificent silver bowl; from the London house a handsome silver inkstand, and from New York a silver loving cup of elegant design.

In connection with the wedding festivities an excursion to Stirling was arranged for the employees of the Edinburgh house on the 9th of April; and, at the special invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Brown, the London staff met for dinner at the Holborn Restaurant on the 13th inst., where an altogether enjoyable evening was spent under the presidency of the London manager, Mr. G. Johnston.

THE SPRING PUBLISHING OUTLOOK IN THE UNITED STATES.

The break between the fall and spring seasons promises to be not as pronounced as in former years. The phenomenal activity during the last three months of the year evidently moved publishers to regard the future optimistically, and accordingly they have made preparations that will fill up the interval usually regarded as the dull season without any perceptible break.

Indeed, judging from the reports of the travellers and the preparations made, publishers look with buoyant confidence upon the book season that is now commencing. There are about a thousand books to come, and the number already published since the beginning of the year exceeds by hundreds the output of former years during the same period.

The announcements have a decidedly literary flavour, though, naturally, inasmuch as we are approaching the summer season, 'light literature' occupies the foremost place as regards number. But it is not fiction alone, however much that promises to hold its own for quality and interest, that fills the lists; essays, letters, books of travel, and educational works constitute an important factor in the spring output of books.

The book trade looks forward with especial interest to the opening of the coming season, because with its advent begins practically a new era in the publishing and selling of books. On May 1, according to the plan proposed by the American Publishers' Association, and which we have every reason to believe will be endorsed by the American Booksellers' Association, whose organisation probably will be completed before the end of this month, a large portion of the new books will be sold on a basis that will insure a more secure and profitable living to the one engaged in the sale of books.

True, a vital point seems to have been left uncovered in the new arrangement, by leaving the regulation of the discount on fiction to the discretion of individual publishers, and some other points will very likely need straightening out; but much thought has been given to the pros and cons of the plan, and if the result is not satisfactory to all at the start, that is a condition that must be met with in all tentative reform measures. There is every reason to hope that in course of time, with earnest co-operation of all concerned, the reforms will take such shape that all who are concerned in marketing books will have a more adequate remuneration for their services than they have been able to obtain for over a quarter of a century.—Publishers' Weekly.

THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The following resolution was unanimously passed at the Council Meeting of the Publishers' Association on April 18 last:—

'The Council of the Publishers' Association wish to place on record their sense of the loss which the trade has sustained by the death of Mr. George M. Smith, who for many years has been a distinguished member of their craft, and who by his high character, enterprise, and liberality has rendered valuable service to the literature of this country.

'It is ordered that this resolution be communicated to the family of Mr. Smith.'

A FRENCH CATALOGUE.

We have received from H. le Soudier, 174 Boulevard St.-Germain, Paris, a copy of Tome 1 of 'Bibliographie Française: recueil de catalogues des éditeurs français, accompagné d'une Table alphabétique par noms d'auteur et d'une Table systématique, 2^e édition, revue, corrigée et considérablement augmentée.' This catalogue, in ten volumes, containing about 9,000 pages, is published at 50 fr. It gives information as to French books issued between January 1896 and December 31, 1899. Our readers will understand the sort of work this is when we tell them that it is, like Whitaker's well-known 'Reference Catalogue of Current Literature,' a collection of catalogues issued by the various publishers, bound together in volumes and indexed. Mr. Whitaker's collection of catalogues is bound in 2 vols., cr. 8vo. half leather, cut; M. le Soudier's, in 10 vols., roy. 8vo., swd. (paper) and—most unfortunately—uncut. Mr. Whitaker's latest edition appeared in 1898, M. le Soudier's first edition appeared in 1896 and his second is dated 1900. Mr. Whitaker's first volume weighs nearly 8 lb., the whole work about 16 lb. M. le Soudier's first volume weighs over 3 lb., the whole work probably 30 lb. Although catalogues in M. le Soudier's first bundle bear the imprints of printers in all parts of France the paper used is all of the same shade of white, so the book presents a better appearance than does the 'Reference Catalogue,' which is made up of pamphlets no two publishers of which seem to have employed the same paper-maker. Publishing in France does not seem to be concentrated in Paris to the extent to which that of England is in London. There are more than 150 publishers' catalogues in Mr. Whitaker's work, and if there had been 50 more it would probably have included all the English publishers who catalogue their publications, though the list of publishers in the 'English Catalogue of Books' for 1900 contains 550 names. M. le Soudier's work contains the catalogues of 174 publishers (so we judge from the list at the beginning of his first volume); but M. le Soudier says in his preface that his index contains the names of more than 500 publishers, so, unlike Mr. Whitaker, he indexes the publications of those who do not send him their catalogues. A plan of M. le Soudier which Mr. Whitaker might adopt to the advantage of his customers is to denote by a special mark in the index those books which are out of print. M. le Soudier's index fills the whole of his tenth volume. We have not seen it, but from what we have learned about it we judge that it makes his ten-volume catalogue fill for French bibliographers the place which could be filled for English ones by a combination of Whitaker's 'Reference Catalogue' and the 'English Catalogue of Books.' The work, which indexes in its tenth volume 125,000 titles, is indispensable to all who deal in French books, either as buyers, sellers, lenders, or readers. The weekly 'Mémorial de la Librairie Française,' and the yearly index compiled from it, form supplements to this 'Bibliographie Française,' just as the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, and the yearly 'English Catalogue' form supplements to Vol. V. of the 'English Catalogue of Books.'

IN MEMORIAM.

We regret to learn that Mr. Wohlleben, bookseller and publisher, of Great Russell St., died suddenly on April 16.

ADVENTURES OF A NOVEL.

Mr. Justin McCarthy, writing about Miss Julia M. Crottie's book, 'The Lost Land,' gives a most interesting account of its adventures before publication which will bear repeating. He says: 'This novel has a curious history of its own. It was the first complete work of the authoress, although it only appears in print now when the authoress has already established a decided literary success. This book, when written, was shown to a lady friend of Miss Crottie, who took it away with her to read, and, without the consent of the authoress, sent it for inspection to a London publisher. What happened then? The publisher lost the manuscript. No trace of it could be discovered; Miss Crottie heroically went to work again and re-wrote the whole book. The new manuscript was then sent to the editor of a London magazine—and, yes, I am not jesting, it is quite true—the second manuscript was also lost, and has never been recovered. Only think of it, ye young beginners in the work of novel-writing; only think what your feelings would be if the novel which you had written out twice over was lost each time it was sent to a possible publisher! Miss Crottie must, on the second failure, have felt for a time something very like despair. She bore up, however, and, yielding to the urgency of two or three friends, she went to work again, wrote out her book for the third time, and behold, at last, Mr. Fisher Unwin, the eminent London publisher, has given it to the world in a handsome and finely printed volume. "The Lost Land" has not been absolutely lost after all. I have known a good deal about books and their authors in my time, but I do not think I ever became acquainted with so strange a story in its way as that which I have just told to my readers, and for the authenticity of which I can vouch.'

DINNER OF THE PUBLISHERS' AND BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATIONS.

The dinner of the Publishers' and Booksellers' Associations, which will be held at the Hotel Cecil on Friday, May 10, promises to be a great success. As the publishers are bringing many of our leading authors among their friends, it would be advisable for those wishing to obtain tickets to make early application to the Secretary of the Publishers' Association, Mr. W. Poulten, Stationers' Hall, London, E.C.

IMPERIAL COPYRIGHT ACT.

MELBOURNE: April 13.

Mr. Chamberlain has forwarded the Imperial Copyright Act with a view to its approval by the Commonwealth. The same course has been followed in regard to Canada and South Africa.

The Federal Cabinet has approved the Act, subject to the inclusion of clauses preserving the rights of legislation by the Commonwealth.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'The Observations of Henry,' by Jerome K. Jerome (Arrowsmith's Bristol Library, Vol. lxxxvii). Mr. Jerome has got thoroughly into the character of Henry, the waiter, and records his observations with infinite gusto and relish. But it must have seemed strange to hear one of the white-chokered attendants of the Riffel Alp Hotel describing his experiences in the ripe phraseology of the Mile End Road. One of the most comical stories of the collection is 'The Uses and Abuses of Joseph.' This young gentleman, from a pure love of excitement and adventure, was led to take up with the life of a burglar, all other callings being in his estimation uninteresting and played out. Ultimately, however, after a housebreaking career of much merit, he fell under the influence of 'an odd sort of a cove,' who induced him to go out to Africa as a missionary. Here he found the life exciting enough, even for one of his prodigious capacity, and eventually he was eaten by cannibals—or rather he should say, supposed to have been eaten, for Henry is sceptical on the matter. 'Speaking for myself, I never believed the report; he wasn't that sort. If anybody was eaten it was more likely the cannibal. One of these days he'll turn up, sound and whole.' The book is delightfully amusing in its unstudied cockneyisms, and will provoke the reader to hearty laughter.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'An Introduction to the Study of Physics,' Vol. 1: 'General Physical Measurements,' by Allan F. Walden, M.A., and J. J. Manley. (Black's 'Science Series.') This volume excellently illustrates the tendency nowadays apparent among authors of educational works to supply something more than a mere text-book on the subject with which they deal, but to stimulate the student's interest by a more attractive method of treatment. In other words, the desire has been 'rather to encourage inquiry than to satisfy curiosity, rather to suggest experiments than to prescribe exercises.' We can recommend the book as being an excellent aid to the study of elementary physics. It is clearly expressed, well arranged, and usefully illustrated.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Correspondence College Press).—'Livy: Book XXII,' edited by John Thompson, M.A., and F. G. Plaistowe, M.A. This is another of the admirable editions which the University Correspondence College Press so well know how to prepare for the purposes of tutorial work. In the introduction some account is given of the life of the author and the general details of his subject, while a large number of notes supply the student with practical information in regard to all the more obscure passages of the text.

From the same.—'Herodotus, IV., chapters 1-144,' edited by W. J. Woodhouse, M.A. This little volume will excellently serve the purpose of 'The University Tutorial Series,' and should be found of great value, more especially in regard to the introduction and notes, by the candidate for examination honours. Mr. Woodhouse has exercised an excellent discretion in confining himself to the practical side of his subject, and has never obtruded his own extensive knowledge to the unnecessary overloading of the student.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Child, his Nature, and Nurture,' by W. B. Drummond, M.B., C.M., M.R.C.P. Edin. Solomon tells us to train up a child in the way he should go. That, doubtless, is excellent advice; but there is no more helpless being than a human infant; and therefore it is important that mothers should know how to care for their children's bodies as well as minds. This is the very desirable information contained in Dr. Drummond's little book before us, which is both simple and practical, and forms one of that admirable series, the 'Temple Primers.' It cannot be too widely circulated.

From the same.—'First Aid to the Injured and Ambulance Drill,' by H. Drinkwater, M.D. The author of this volume of the valuable 'Temple Primers,' while admitting that a few excellent manuals on the subject of First Aid are already before the public, is convinced, from his own experience of nearly twenty years as an examiner, that a more practical manual is wanted, as some works are too full of theoretical matter. To supply the want he has written the book under notice, which appears fully to meet all requirements, omitting as it does all unnecessary details and laying special stress on all essential points. The illustrations are numerous and accurate, and the manual cannot fail to be helpful to all interested in ambulance work.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden.—'Words for Trumpet Calls used in Cavalry, Yeomanry, A. S. Corps, &c., &c.,' by Corporal-Trumpeter W. H. Reid. The author of this amusing little collection of words, to trumpet calls tells us: 'There are about one hundred calls used in Cavalry and nearly that number in Infantry; Field and Horse Artillery mostly use Cavalry calls, while Garrison Artillery, R. Army Medical Corps, and the Engineers use Infantry calls. In order to recollect these calls Tommy has associated them with words. . . . It was the author's first intention to collect all these sets of words, and to fill in the residue himself.' He found, however, that very few fit the music, and some are unfit for print and seldom convey the meaning of the call; so he wrote those contained in this little book. The author does not lay claim to any literary ability, but thinks this little book will assist the soldier in learning the calls and their meaning.

From the same.—'Words for the Infantry Bugle Calls,' by Corporal-Trumpeter W. H. Reid, Middlesex Yeomanry. The notice already given of Corporal-Trumpeter Reid's 'Words for Trumpet Calls' applies equally to his 'Words for Bugle Calls.'

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'With Christ in Sailor Town: What the Seamen's Mission is Doing,' by Frank T. Bullen. An interesting account is given in this little volume of the noble efforts being made in the East End for the improvement of the social and spiritual condition of the sailor man. What at present has been achieved is a grand tribute to the vigorous endeavour of an unselfish band of workers, but much yet remains to be done. Mr. Bullen pleads the cause of the sailor with heartfelt enthusiasm, and we are sure that some of his fervour will be communicated to his readers.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'His Own Father,' by W. E. Norris. That the author should have been able to make so interesting a story from such slight material testifies greatly to his skill and attractive method of narration. There is little in the plot beyond the efforts of an anxious mother to keep her daughter from marrying an undesirable Austrian Count, with the corresponding exertions on the young man's part to overcome the matrimonial obstacles. A middle-aged admirer, who would in every way satisfy the good lady's requirements, stupidly refuses to recognise the situation, and is so philosophical in mind that he cannot be induced to make a bold bid for the prize. When he at length sums up sufficient resolution, the girl refuses to take his proposal as seriously meant, so that he has again to fall back upon such small comfort as his philosophy can afford. In the end the persistent young Austrian comes off with flying colours, but not before he has shown himself a very pretty strategist. Matters are somewhat complicated by the fact that the girl's father is supposed to have accidentally killed the Austrian's father in the Tyrol, but the lover ably puts this straight by impersonating his own father, and in this way proving that he was not actually killed. Under the same disguise he gives his full consent to his own marriage. The story, as we have said, is very readable, though not of great substance.

From R. Brimley Johnson.—'Cranford at Home,' a play for ladies. Adapted from Mrs. Gaskell's novel, 'Carpet Plays,' by L. Oldershaw. This forms the first of a series of plays for ladies only, entitled 'Carpet Plays,' under the editorship of Mr. Lucian Oldershaw, sometime stage manager to the Oxford University Dramatic Society. Of course, if there must be plays for ladies only, then it stands to reason that the male parts must go; and this being conceded, we have nothing but praise to offer Mr. Oldershaw for the excellent use he has made of the choice materials at his command. At the same time we miss what he somewhat irreverently terms 'the disturbing element of man,' and we can hardly conceive of any human being (with one exception, and he, alas! is no longer of this world) parting without a pang from Captain Brown, who preferred Mr. Boz to Dr. Johnson. Of course everyone knows the objection Charles Dickens had to 'Cranford' in consequence of the said Captain Brown's absurd liking for Mr. Pickwick and his creator, and how he wrote as follows to Mrs. Gaskell on December 5, 1851: 'Any recollection of me from your pen cannot be otherwise than gratifying to me; but with my name on every page of Household Words there would be—or at least I should feel—an impropriety in so mentioning myself. I was particular in changing the author to make it "Hood's Poems" in the most important place—I mean where the captain is killed.'

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—'Eugene Schuyler: Selected Essays,' with a Memoir by Evelyn Schuyler Schaeffer. The well-written biography with which this volume opens acts as an excellent incentive to a just appreciation of the essays which follow. In many respects Eugene Schuyler was a very remarkable man, and it was his fortune during lifetime to be connected with events that have agitated the world's history. He was born at Ithaca, New York, on February 26, 1840, his ancestors on the father's side being almost entirely Dutch. From an early age he showed signs of great mental activity, his chief inclinations being for books and the study of languages. In the last respect he was especially gifted. After a course of some distinction at Yale, he studied law at Columbia College, 'not because the profession particularly attracted him, but rather because he had not as yet found anything that seemed to him more desirable.' Circumstances in later years attracted his attention to Russia, and he acquired a knowledge of the language, subsequently publishing a translation of Turgénief's 'Fathers and Sons.' In 1867 he obtained an appointment as Consul at Moscow, and from this year dates the commencement of a long and honourable diplomatic career. Among the friendships he formed was that of Count Tolstoy, whom he visited at his estate of Yásnaya Polyána. Subsequently he was appointed Consul at St. Petersburg, being transferred at the beginning of 1876 to Constantinople. Here he found himself amid all the turmoil created by the obstinacy of Turkey, previous to the Turko-Russian war. In connection with this period of his life there is much that is interesting regarding the great political figures of the time, and a suggestion is thrown out that Beaconsfield was intriguing, through Sir Henry Elliot, during the Eastern crisis against Lord Salisbury. It is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Schuyler was anything but a persona grata with the Turks. He had shown up their barbarities too vigorously for that. In later years he occupied diplomatic positions at Rome, Bucharest, and Athens, returning to America in the autumn of 1884. The last consulship he held was at Cairo, and he wrote to his wife that after such a long absence from official business it was 'like beginning a new career.' The essays included in the volume are three. They treat of 'Count Leo Tolstoy Twenty Years Ago,' 'The Minnesota Heir of a Serbian King,' and 'The Lost Plant.' We have unfortunately left ourselves no space to speak in detail of these, but we may say that each reveals a vigorous grasp and masterly insight that should render them highly attractive reading. The essay on Tolstoy is especially interesting as coming from a man who was not only on terms of intimacy with the Russian novelist, but possessed that thorough knowledge of the country and its people without which it is well nigh impossible to form an adequate judgment.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'A Year in China, 1899-1900,' by Clive Bigham, C.M.G. The author of this interesting volume sets an example that it would be well if other narrators of adventurous travel copied. He gives a plain, straightforward account of his experiences, leaving facts to speak for themselves, and in no way dogmatizing to the British Government as to the lines upon which their policy towards the Celestial Empire should be based. Altogether Mr. Bigham spent nearly eighteen months in the Far East, and this period, so far as he was concerned, was certainly not characterised by any want of activity. He first went from Canton across the little-explored provinces of Kwangtung and Kiangsi to Hankow on the Yangtze-Kiang, thence travelling in a chair or on horseback, with his baggage in three unwieldy native wheel-barrows, over the great plain to Kaifong and Weihui, and subsequently by 'Tientsin House boat' and fast train to Peking, where he had been appointed to the British Legation staff. Mr. Bigham was subsequently sent on a diplomatic mission across Manchuria, and he then made his way by Korea and Japan back to Shanghai, up the Yangtze river to Chun-Kiang and overland through Chentu and Sianfu to Tientsin again. He afterwards visited Port Arthur, the advantages of which as a strategic station do not seem to have impressed him very highly. His account of the many interesting and in some cases amusing experiences that marked his journeying tends very powerfully to show the amount of ignorance that prevails in China and the terribly backward state of progress. That there is urgent need of reform in the Chinese administration, army, and system of education is now generally admitted, but it is a fact that can never be over-enforced upon the people themselves. Mr. Bigham on his return took part in the courageous but unsuccessful attempt made by the composite force under Admiral Seymour to cut their way through to Peking and relieve the Legations, and of this portion of his adventures he affords an extremely vivid picture. His book will be found highly attractive by all who are in-

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Adventure of Princess Sylva,' by Mrs. C. N. Williamson. Mrs. Williamson is seen at her best in this novel, and she has treated a highly romantic situation in a light and captivating manner. The Princess Sylva is the peerless daughter of the Grand Duchess of Eltzburg-Neuwald, who for some years has been domiciled in this country. Sylva's hand is sought through the usual ministerial channel by Maximilian, Emperor of Rhaetia, whom she has long ardently admired from a distance; but this style of wooing does not suit, the winsome young beauty at all. Maximilian must be made to love her for herself, not as a suitable diplomatic alliance. So what does this foolish impulsive creature do but drag her poor mother under an assumed name to Heiligengelt in the Rhaetian Alps, where she understands Kaiser Max goes in mufti at this season of the year for chamois-hunting. Fortune favours her, the desired meeting comes off, and the Emperor is plainly fascinated. Of course each of the parties thinks his or her identity completely disguised, which it is in the one case though not in the other. But on removal of the scene to Salzbrüch, where the Emperor has to appear in his real character, complications arise. It is quite impossible for Maximilian to make 'Miss de Courcy' Empress of Rhaetia, and his proposal of a 'morganatic' marriage she indignantly declines. Eventually she has the pleasure of seeing him willing to sacrifice everything for her sake—the humble slave she had desired him to be. How the story further progresses we are not disposed to disclose, but we may say that the final revelation is brought about in very telling fashion. For character portrayal there is not much scope in the tale, but the Emperor is plainly modelled on a distinguished personage of the present day, whilst the attractive warm-hearted nature of the Princess Sylva is depicted with such irresistible force that all romantic readers must succumb to her charms.

From the same.—'A State Secret and other Stories,' by B. M. Croker. It is always a pleasure to read one of Mrs. Croker's stories, whether the scene of it be laid in Ireland or elsewhere, although we must confess to a liking for tales of the Emerald Isle. In the volume before us we have ten delightful tales, the first of which, 'A State Secret,' happens to be about Ireland and also about emeralds; but it would be unfair to both writer and reader were we to hint at the plot of any among these admirably told novelettes. Their themes are so varied that readers of all tastes cannot fail to find one at least to his or her liking. There is fun in 'Sullivan's Bargain,' and some of life's bitter irony in 'The Little Blue Jug,' and readers in search of a good ghost story may be recommended to 'An Unexpected Invitation,' which, if read late at night, will send them trembling to bed.

From Mr. David Nutt.—'The Way of the Sun,' by the Rev. Conrad Noel. An interesting pamphlet on the Sabbatarian question. The author has plainly no sympathy with Puritanism in its various aspects, but he holds that 'until the nation comes under the spell of a great religion which embraces all the facts of life and which hallows all things secular, whether politics, commerce, or amusements, little permanent good can be done in the matter of freeing the Sunday of its Puritan shackles.' The tendency at present is towards drifting out of an unenlightened creed into unenlightened pleasure-seeking, and this can only be arrested by the education of the heart and imagination of the country in the first principles of a really humanist faith. His little work, therefore, is undertaken with a desire to accomplish something towards this end, and it will be found to contain in small compass an outline history of the Sunday and Sunday observance.—We have also received from the same publisher No. 10 of the 'Popular Studies in Mythology, Romance, and Folklore.' It is entitled 'The Romance Cycle of Charlemagne and his Peers,' and is from the pen of Miss Jessie L. Weston.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—The new volume in Messrs. Partridge's excellent eighteenpenny 'New Century Leaders' series is 'Frederick Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury,' by W. Francis Aitken, who claims on behalf of his interesting sketch that it is the only account of the greatest Churchman in the Empire in book form. The sketch shows the reader what sort of a boy Frederick Temple was at Tiverton, how fond he was of books and how equally fond of Nature. He will see him as a scholar, as a student at Oxford, as Headmaster of Rugby, and in his subsequent career as Bishop and Archbishop. The little biography is of course very restricted in its limits, but will none the less be welcomed by the many admirers of Dr. Temple. The author of 'Lorna Doone' was at Blundell's School, Tiverton, at the same time as Dr. Temple.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'The Master Passion: a novel,' by Bessie Hatton. The heroine of this story is the only child of a young painter named Edward Woollicroft, an enthusiastic lover of his art, whose father has left him a small income, so that he had 'been able to work for the love of art alone.' The council of the R.A. had bought one of his pictures for the Chantrey Bequest, and his prospects seemed good when he was attacked by consumption which was wasting his life when the story begins. He had married a beautiful young Italian woman, who died soon after giving birth to a daughter after only one year of happy wedded life. In compliance with her dying mother's request, the heroine had been baptised into the Romish communion by the name of 'Dolores, after the Mother of Sorrows.' This young lady is described as a remarkable-looking girl who 'promised to grow into a beautiful woman.' Meanwhile, to judge by her words and acts, she is a regular tomboy with a fearful temper. In the first chapter we read that she strikes her little cousin Johnnie on the head with a rake because he prefers gardening to playing at horses, and calls her aunt 'a nagging d—d old widow,' because of her dilating at somewhat undue length on faults in dress and behaviour. One redeeming trait in the girl's character is filial affection; but this is not strong enough to make her heed her father's remonstrances as to her self-will. With a leading character so well conceived and maintained throughout the book it may be supposed there is no lack of incident in the story. Other personages, too, are cleverly depicted—notably Woollicroft's elder sister, Mrs. Godwin, who tells her brother how she was converted to Romanism. Having been attracted by the services at a convent chapel in France, she arranged to be received into the convent as a visitor, and to be instructed in doctrine. 'When I had been there a fortnight I had a private conversation with the priest; I did not understand anything he said, but he was very charming, and allowed me to attend the religious lessons with the girls . . . and eventually I was baptised.'

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'The White Jacket; or, the World in a Man-of-

War,' by Herman Melville. This is a handsomely illustrated reprint of one of those excellent stories by the author of 'Typee' and 'Omoo' which used to delight the readers of half a century ago. The 'White Jacket' first appeared in print in 1850, and—as the preface, dated New York, March 1850, tells us—embodies the experiences of the author on board a frigate in the United States navy, which he joined as a common sailor in the year 1843. As a sample of the book we extract the following from the description of one of the hero's top-mates, an English sailor, Jack Chase, who figures prominently in the story: 'First and foremost was Jack Chase, our noble First Captain of the Top. He was a Briton and a true-blue; tall and well knit, with a clear open eye, a fine broad brow, and an abounding nut-brown beard. No man ever had a better heart or a bolder. He was loved by the seamen and admired by the officers; and even when the captain spoke to him, it was with a slight air of respect. Jack was a frank and charming man. No one could be better company in fore-castle or saloon; no man told such stories, sang such songs, or with greater alacrity sprang to his duty. Indeed, there was only one thing wanting about him; and that was a finger of his left hand, which finger he had lost at the great battle of Navarino. . . . Wherever you may be now rolling over the blue billows, dear Jack! take my best love with you, and God bless you, wherever you go!' There is a cheery spirit about this book which is almost as exhilarating as a sea-trip without any of the accompanying discomfort often experienced by a landsman on a ship at sea.

From the Scientific Press, Ltd.—'The Nursing Profession: How and Where to Train,' edited by Sir Henry Burdett, K.C.B. The third annual issue of this useful little work, being a guide to training for the profession of a nurse, with particulars of nurse-training schools in the United Kingdom and abroad, and an outline of the principal laws affecting nurses. In an introductory chapter entitled 'The Common Requirements of the Training School,' some valuable information is given as to the conditions of training at general hospitals and other nursing institutions, so that anyone who consults these pages will be able to obtain a preliminary knowledge of every requisite particular as to qualifications, preliminary requirements, hours of duty, examinations, recreations, salary, premium, sleeping accommodation, and, in fact, everything which an intending probationer may want to know—information which hitherto has been obtainable only by writing to the matrons or communicating with a special technical journal. It is just the book for the woman who is attracted to nursing, and desires to become a fully trained nurse.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co.—'From the Dead Past,' by P. J. Moro. We sympathise with the kindly intention of the author to give us a few 'creeps' in this collection of short stories, and are sorry that his abilities are not equal to the effort. Probably, on some less experienced and case-hardened subject the attempt may not be made in vain, and we therefore have pleasure in recommending them to the notice of all who would hear of unholy communings with the dead, with the additional attraction of a real corpse thrown in occasionally.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Windsor Magazine,' April issue. We do not remember to have made acquaintance with a more entertaining series of contents in this magazine for some time past. Both authors and illustrators seem to be at their best, and the general production of the number, it need scarcely be said, is beyond question. Among the contributors are Anthony Hope, Barry Pain, Richard Marsh, Phillips Oppenheim, Francis Gribble, Marie A. Belloc, Fred W. Crowe, and some others of less note, but one and all do their utmost to provide an appetising repast for the reader and admirably succeed. Mr. Phillips Oppenheim tells of 'My Dreadful Secret'—how dreadful it must be readers can imagine from his previous stories; Mr. Anthony Hope relates one of his pointed 'Dolly Dialogues'; Mr. Barry Pain waxes humorous over city 'Bluff'; and Mr. Richard Marsh has a story to unfold, something out of his usual line (but then he always was versatile) about 'Staggers.' The man or woman who cannot spend a quiet evening at home with the Windsor Magazine as companion deserves no sympathy from anyone.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Secret of the Dead,' by L. T. Meade. We do not remember to have read a sensational novel by Mrs. Meade before, and on the whole we can scarcely compliment her on the new departure. In general conception, construction, and workmanship, 'The Secret of the Dead' is much below her usual standard, and suggests an element of carelessness. A young girl, Lucy Merriman, comes up to London to stay with an aunt who keeps a lodging-house in Maida Vale. Arrived at her destination, she finds that her relative has been unexpectedly called away to the rescue of an unprincipled husband, and that she is left in sole charge of the establishment and its odd collection of inmates. Among the lodgers is an old gentleman named Cuthbert. That same night he is taken very ill, and on Lucy sitting up with him he confides a great secret to her. This secret is enclosed in a small leather box. What its exact nature is no one knows, for these old fellows are wonderful hands at keeping up a mystery, but it is supposed to be of tremendous value. After the old man's death efforts are made by various people, including the rascally uncle, to induce Lucy to give up the secret. Eventually she hides the box for better protection in a barn, and here the wicked uncle finds it. But fortunately he only takes a jewelled locket away, leaving behind the real secret, which is inscribed in invisible ink on a piece of white parchment. So it comes into the right hands after all, which are those belonging to the person of Mr. Cuthbert's son, and the story ends to virtuous rejoicing.

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Publishers' Circular 'Export Number'

TO PUBLISHERS AND BOOKSELLERS.

On the 11th of May will be issued the Fifteenth Annual Export Number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, and we again venture to solicit your order and copy for an Advertisement. The PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR is steadily increasing in circulation and influence, and we may say that of this Special Number 2,000 extra copies will be printed and distributed, CHIEFLY DIRECT BY POST, amongst the best and largest buyers in the Colonies and United States, and on the Continent.

The Number will be found a most suitable medium for advertising NEW and FORTHCOMING BOOKS, COLONIAL EDITIONS, REMAINDERS, &c.; the great object being to place before the EXPORT TRADE not merely announcements of forthcoming works, but lists of Standard and other Books suitable for the BOOK MARKET ABROAD.

Within recent years the export of books has enormously increased—as may be seen from the Board of Trade Returns—and the value of this Special Number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR as an advertising medium can scarcely be over-estimated.

A Special Feature of this forthcoming Export Number is to be the COMMENCEMENT of a SERIES OF ARTICLES on some which will undoubtedly be of great interest both at Home and in the Colonies.

A FIGHT OVER FICTION.

The same cause which led to the more general application of the net book system in this country has led to its adoption in the United States, viz. the evil of under-selling. The formation of Publishers' and Booksellers' Associations in this country, in order to deal with the evil, gave the example to our friends across the Atlantic, which they have followed with characteristic energy and thoroughness; in fact, fears are already expressed in some quarters that, in the words of the Publishers' Weekly, 'the whole plan may be jeoparded' if more moderate counsels do not prevail.

What is the rock ahead in America on which the net system threatens to founder? Curiously enough, it is fiction—not a fiction, but fiction. The American booksellers say that to leave fiction out of the net book plan is like 'Hamlet' without the Prince of Denmark; on the other hand, many publishers feel seriously and strongly that the time is not yet ripe for making fiction net. The consequence of this divergence of views is that there have been very unpleasant and ominous suggestions from the booksellers of boycotting those publishers who do not fall into line and march to the order of the associated booksellers.

According to the Publishers' Weekly, 'it goes without saying that fiction should be included in any plan of reform, and the sole question is, whether it can usefully be included now or should be left out until the net system is found to work and the first difficulties are smoothed out of the way.' To this the booksellers reply that 'undercutting has been most serious in fiction, and that it is here that most is to be gained by reform.' The conclusion arrived at by our American contemporary is that 'On the whole, therefore, we are disposed to advise booksellers that the conservative attitude of the Publishers' Association in this respect seems conservatively wise, and should be generally acceptable, always on the understanding that, as soon as the plan has been shown to act satisfactorily within its scope, the publishers should be expected to take prompt steps to include fiction.'

It is noteworthy that, while one of the two chief strongholds of the non-net system, fiction and school literature, is being attacked in America, in this country the campaign is being carried into the domain of cheap literature, and the Associated Booksellers of this country are appealing to the proprietors of magazines and reviews with the suggestion that they should make their prices net.

But the American booksellers are not only crying out for all books to be made net, they are also already demanding better terms for net books.

In America as in this country the amount of trade discount off net books is not a fixed quantity. The American publishers 'do not,' says the Weekly, 'restrict the discount to 25% but only suggest that amount as perhaps the safest and wisest. If this could be extended to 30 per cent., or one third, without danger of renewing demoralisation, it would certainly be more satisfactory and inspiring to the retail trade.' The italics are ours.

The position on the other side of the Atlantic reminds us of Æsop's fable of the Frogs and Jupiter.

The Frogs (The Booksellers) call out to Jupiter (i.e. Mr. Charles Scribner, President of the Publishers' Association) for a King, and he gives them King Log (the net system) but they are not satisfied, and to keep them quiet he is asked to give them King Stork (33½ % discount) with the result, if he does, that the frogs will probably find themselves struggling in a bog of discount anarchy worse than before.

Both in this country and in the United States there are many booksellers who bitterly lament that the net book system was ever introduced. These are mostly small country booksellers who have to give long credit on a small turnover. In America the booksellers of the Pacific Coast say that 'the cost of freight so materially reduces the margin of discount that no living profit is left.'

The New York Publishers' Weekly says: 'We have pointed out more than once that the solution of the question should be found in the larger extent of sales within the book trade under the new plan—so that fixed charges &c. will be proportionately reduced and the margin of profit thus increased.' We are not surprised to find that it candidly admits that 'it is evident that the retail trade feels strongly that this solution is not altogether satisfactory.' Our contemporary's is the first suggestion we have seen that refusing to give the accustomed discount is a reason why the public should buy more books, nor do we think that the retail trade will look with favour on its suggestion that Publishers' Associations or publishers' combines should establish depôts in different parts of the country for supplying the local trade.

Whatever happens, we hope that none of the new associations in the book trade, on either side of the Atlantic, will endeavour to realise their aims by adopting the policy that 'union gives strength' to get what you want—fairly if possible, but in any case to get it.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

In his speech as president of the Annual Meeting of the Bookbinders' Pension and Asylum Society, Mr. Frederick Macmillan, as will be seen from our report, touched upon a most important and somewhat delicate question, viz. the alleged restriction of output from labour-saving machinery, which is a sore point with master printers and binders and other employers of labour. There is no doubt that, rightly or wrongly, one of the drawbacks from which employers of labour suffer is supposed to be the refusal of the trade unions to allow unrestricted output either of mechanical or manual energy.

There has been a great and grave outcry of late as to loss of trade in many of the great industries in this country. The other day we asked a large ironmaster in the Midlands what we had to fear from American competition. He said it was not so much American competition that threatened our trade, as the action of the trade unions in this country which refuse to allow machinery to be utilised to the extent of its capabilities and, worse still, refuse to allow human workers to work as they otherwise willingly would. The American workman is not naturally a better workman than his English rival, but he is allowed to do his best and earn as much money as he cares to, consequently he works with the knowledge that it will pay him to do his best; his English rival's will to work is restricted by trade union rules, and so no wonder America is securing our trade.

The Lover's Replies to "An English-woman's Love Letters" is the title of a new work which will be published on May 9 by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., in London; and by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co., of New York.

The Religious Tract Society's Spring List will contain several books of exceptional interest. Canon Fleming, who for many years was honorary chaplain to the Prince of Wales, has produced a dainty little volume entitled 'Our Gracious Queen Alexandra.' In this he gives a character sketch of the Queen and some details never before published in book form relating to the illness of the Prince of Wales in 1872 and the death of the Duke of Clarence. The book contains a very fine photogravure portrait of the Queen from a painting by Mr. Edward Hughes.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. will publish immediately a Malay-English Dictionary, by R. J. Wilkinson. It will form a work of about 750 pages, in two quarto volumes. The work will contain, besides the dictionary proper, a general introduction on the sources and history of the Malay language, appendices on its orthography and literature, and an index for the use of those to whom the Arabic character is unfamiliar. The preparation of this index and the adoption of a consistent system of Malay spelling should add to the usefulness of a book which is primarily intended to be a work of reference.

Five Rembrandt photogravures of representative pictures in the Royal Academy (in place of the single plate which has hitherto been given) will be issued by Messrs. Cassell & Company in their fine art work 'Royal Academy Pictures 1901.' This publication will be issued in five parts, each containing a photogravure, and as usual will have reproductions of representative pictures that will appear in no other publication.

Messrs. Methuen are about to bring out a 'Biography of Colonel Cody, better known as "Buffalo Bill." The book, which is entitled 'The Last of the Great Scouts,' has been written by Colonel Cody's sister, who has found in the adventurous and romantic life of her brother a subject of great fascination. The book is fully illustrated.

'In Bad Company,' Mr. Rolf Boldrewood's latest book, just published by Messrs. Macmillan, is a collection of Australian stories and sketches.

Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy has written a biography of one of the most striking and interesting figures of the seventeenth century, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish shortly under the title of 'The Queen's Comrade, or the Life and Times of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough.' Thirty-four volumes of MSS. originally collected or written by her Grace have furnished materials for a lively picture not only of the indomitable Duchess, but of the Courts in which she played so important a part during her life of eighty-four years.

The author of 'Festus,' Mr. P. J. Bailey, was born on the 22nd of April, 1816, and we are glad to say is still living and in good health at the place of his nativity, Nottingham, and nearly in the same spot. According to 'Who's Who' his long poem 'Festus,' which was published in 1839, has gone through eleven editions in England and more than thirty in America. Mr. Albert Broadbent, Publisher and Bookseller, of 19 Oxford Street, Manchester, sends us a very nicely printed little 'Festus' Treasury, the object of which is 'to make Mr. Bailey's great masterpiece more widely known . . . "Festus" possesses a message specially suited to the spiritual and intellectual needs of the present day—of young men particularly. The publisher feels, therefore, that he requires no apology in asking every reader of the lovely selections in this Treasury to assist in so worthy an object.'

Archæologists will be glad to know that the concluding volume (Volume IV.) of 'Old Northern Runic Monuments of Scandinavia and England,' by the late Professor George Stephens, will be published shortly in English by Messrs. Williams & Norgate. The work was left incomplete by Professor Stephens, but from his notes and papers his son has been enabled to prepare the volume for publication.

A biography published by the R.T.S. entitled 'The Author of "The Peep of Day,"' describes how that famous book came to be written and what it has done. It also tells how Miss Bevan, born into wealth and luxury, became a devoted Christian worker. In her early womanhood she gained the friendship of Mr. H. E. Manning, in later years the well-known Cardinal Manning, and the book contains a number of letters and details connected with his early manhood and the time when he was Archdeacon which are of more than passing interest.

The R.T.S. list also includes a book for those who are incapacitated by illness, entitled 'From an Invalid's Window.' The plan of this book, and one executed with much literary grace, is to show how many and how varied are the interests which may be made to centre in the room of a permanent invalid. The writer describes the pets she trained, and the lessons they taught her.

A meeting of the Society of Public Librarians was held at the Bishopsgate Institute on Wednesday evening, April 17, when Mr. J. Radcliffe (East Ham) read a paper entitled 'How to Popularise our Libraries.'

That the cycling season has commenced in earnest is apparent from the claims which are reaching Cassell's Saturday Journal, for the free insurance given under the Cyclist Insurance Scheme established in connection with this journal. Several claims have been paid during the past week and 245 have been settled in all, including four of £100 each. This journal also provides free railway and other insurances, and two payments of £1,000 each have been made under this scheme.

Mr. R. Brimley Johnson writes to point out that the limitation 'For ladies only' applies only to the play 'Cranford at Home,' noticed in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of April 20, and not to the series of Carpet Plays of which this is the first volume. They will be for all classes of amateurs.

Mr. Douglas Sladen's new novel, 'My Son Richard, or the Great Company,' gives a most intimate sketch of Thames summer life, and deals with the subject which is uppermost in nearly everybody's mind—the changes in our home life made by the rush of all our sons into the army.

Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co. have just issued a very interesting volume by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, of Steel Trust fame, under the title of 'The Gospel of Wealth.' Among the topics touched upon by Mr. Carnegie in this volume are: 'How I Served my Apprenticeship,' 'The Advantages of Poverty,' 'Popular Illusions about Trusts,' 'Americanism versus Imperialism,' 'Democracy in England,' 'Imperial Federation,' &c.

Mr. David Campbell's 'Victoria—Queen and Empress,' is already in its second edition. The King has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of this work.

Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. announce 'The History of the Union Jack,' by Barlow Cumberland, M.A., with nine coloured plates and sixty-six engravings. After pointing out the associations attaching to the flags of other nations, the author traces the history and origins of the separate flags of the three kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the legends surrounding each. Then follows the story of their combination into the Union Jacks, which were adopted at successive periods in subsequent centuries.

Mr. John Lane has just published, in the 'Flowers of Parnassus' series, 'The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyám,' by Edward Fitzgerald, with illustrations by Herbert Cole.

Mr. Heinemann announces for early publication a work by Mr. W. Bleloch, on 'The New South African Colonies: their Value and Development.' The author—who has lived ten years in South Africa and knows the Boers and their language—writing with the advantage of having obtained the best expert opinions, presents a clear and comprehensive statement of the Empire's field of enterprise in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies. He shows the enormous value of their resources and the State assets, and the capacity of the new Colonies to provide revenue and pay a share of the War Debt: he deals with the opportunities they offer for immigration to agriculturalists, industrial capitalists, and workers in general; and he discusses the pacification of the country and the reconciling of Uitlander, Boer, and native interests. His book is therefore an attempt to provide an unofficial prospectus of the work of Great Britain in the Transvaal.

Mr. John Long has ready for immediate publication Mrs. Lovett Cameron's new novel, 'Bitter Fruit.'

The third volume (completing the work) of Professor McCurdy's 'History, Prophecy, and the Monuments, or Israel and the Nations,' is now published by the Macmillan Company.

Messrs. Hutchinson have already a third edition of Mr. J. A. Steuart's capital story, 'The Eternal Quest,' in the press.

An interesting collection of eighteenth century music is advertised, we notice, in the secondhand book catalogue of Messrs. Simmons & Waters, of Leamington Spa. The collection is from the library of Lord Hampton, of Westwood Park.

We understand that Mr. W. S. Lilly's forthcoming work 'Renaissance Types,' which Mr. Fisher Unwin has in preparation, is an endeavour to exhibit the principal characteristics of the memorable age with which it is concerned: 'an age of intellectual and social awakening; of chaotic opposition between old and new, between ecclesiasticism and secularism, between religiosity and sensuousness.'

Mr. R. G. Taber, the author of 'Northern Lights and Shadows,' is now in Naples with his Eskimo Village, which was a popular feature at Olympia about twelve months ago. Mr. Taber has been touring for some months in Northern Africa, visiting Egypt, Tunis, Morocco, and other provinces. During his travels he has gained much curious, and in some respects startling, information as to the inner life of some of the Arab tribes, which he proposes to use in a companion volume to 'Northern Lights and Shadows.'

'Our Country's Shells: a Guide to the British Mollusca,' is in the press. This is a new volume in 'Our Country's' series, of which 'Flowers,' 'Birds,' 'Butterflies,' and 'Moths' have already become recognised handbooks. It is an entirely new work on a scientific basis, but of quite a popular nature. There are thirty-three full-page coloured plates of over 600 examples, illustrating every native species, and the text is further illustrated with many original diagrams of the structure of the shells and their inhabitants. It will be issued shortly by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. announce 'The Successors of Mary the First,' by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, author of 'The Gates Ajar,' illustrated. This may be regarded as Miss Phelps's contribution to the 'servant-girl problem.' It purports to give the experiences with servants of a family in a New England suburban town.

BOOKBINDERS' PENSION AND ASYLUM SOCIETY.

The Annual Meeting of this Society was held on Wednesday evening last at the Town Hall, Rosebery Avenue, E.C., under the presidency of Mr. Frederick Macmillan, who in referring to the work of the Society said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—When I received a communication from your Committee asking me to preside at the Annual Meeting of this Society I accepted the invitation with alacrity, not only because I was duly sensible of the honour which was intended, but also because I was delighted to avail myself of the opportunity of coming face to face with a representative collection of working binders, a body to whose industry and taste I am under very great obligations: I ought, perhaps, to say that my business relations have been and are entirely with cloth binders. The work of extra binders is indeed most fascinating, and in my capacity as a private collector of books has always had, and always will have, my sincere admiration; but my work in the world, as you know, is that of a publisher, and it is therefore with the cloth binders—with the busy throng whose hands turn out in the course of every year the hundreds of thousands of neatly clad volumes with which we try to satisfy the public taste—that I have had my principal dealings.

It would seem more natural, perhaps, that a meeting of the Bookbinders' Pension and Asylum Society should have as its chairman a master binder rather than a publisher, and I believe such has been the case on many, if not on most, previous occasions. But I am glad that on this occasion at least your Committee has seen fit to go farther afield for a chairman, not only because it affords me the opportunity of acknowledging my obligations to your craft, but also because, as an absolute outsider, I shall hope to be allowed to say some things which it may be well to have put into words, but which might be misinterpreted if they fell from the lips of an employer of labour.

The Bookbinders' Pension and Asylum Society is, as you all know, an amalgamation of two societies, one of them founded in 1830 and the other nine years later. During the seventy-one years of its existence it has been the privilege of the Association to make easy the declining years of a large number of workers in the book-binding trade who, through age, illness, or misfortune, have found themselves in circumstances which, except for the existence of this Society, might have landed them in the workhouse. The principle on which the Society has been managed is what I believe to be the sound one that all the members should subscribe, and that the benefits should be enjoyed by those who, having qualified as subscribers, find themselves in absolute want.

The benefits which arise from the existence of this and all similar Friendly Societies are not only material, but moral. It is, of course, the case that those who in their old age or infirmity are helped by this Society receive assistance far in excess of the amount of their personal contributions. This is as it should be. It is the duty of those who have been fortunate in the great struggle for existence to help those who have, for one reason or another, failed to succeed. But it is also of the highest importance that this help should be given to those who have helped themselves, and who have, while they were in health and work, practised sufficient self-denial to enable them to qualify as applicants for relief. The qualification may be a small one, and it is well that it should be; but at least it exists, and the result is that everyone who is now participating, or will in future participate, in the benefits of this institution must at one time have been a subscriber towards its funds.

I am sometimes inclined to fear that the various schemes, some of them good and some of them wild and impossible, which have been promulgated for the establishment of Old Age Pensions may have had an unsatisfactory effect on existing Friendly Societies and on the habits of thrift and the practice of making provision for old age which it should be the aim of those who wish well to the working classes to encourage. The many proposals for Old Age Pensions have thus far only resulted in talk, but I am afraid the discussions on the subject have in not a few cases had the effect of making it more and more difficult for the old Friendly Societies to keep up their numbers and their subscriptions. A man has not unnaturally been inclined to say to himself, 'If in a very short time some plan will be adopted by which I shall receive a weekly pension from the Government by the time I have reached the age of sixty-five, why in the world should I stint myself now for the purpose of belonging to a Friendly Society?' This, I need not say, is all wrong, and the frame of mind which gives rise to such thoughts is inconsistent with the spirit of independence and self-reliance which is, and I hope ever will be, characteristic of our race. To the broad principle of Government pensions to the old I see no objection, but I hope and believe that when any practical steps are taken to establish them it will be in the direction of grants in aid of Friendly Societies, and of augmenting the pensions or allowances to which the members of such societies may have become entitled through their own self-denial and foresight during the working years of their lives.

With regard to this particular Society there have been, as you know, seven pensioners elected to-day. There are many worthy candidates still waiting at the doors to whom the Committee would be only too pleased to award pensions did the funds of the Society permit. For this reason it is of the greatest importance, not only that persuasion should be used to induce the hands in the various shops to become subscribers, but that every legitimate effort should be made to obtain additions to the funds of the Society from master binders, publishers, and others connected, directly or indirectly, with the important industry which this Society represents. A glance at the balance-sheet issued with the annual report will be sufficient to assure the intending benefactor that his money will be laid out to the best advantage.

That institutions such as this should receive the cordial support, not only of the workers, but of the employers of labour is one of the many reasons why it is desirable that perfect confidence and good feeling should exist between these two classes. Everyone who cares for the welfare of his fellow-men must feel that nothing can be more inimical to the aims and ideals he has at heart than a feeling of distrust and suspicion between employers and employed. Unfortunately, I am afraid, no intelligent observer can deny that in very many directions such feelings of distrust and suspicion are to be found. Whose fault it is we need not stop to inquire—there is, probably, a good deal of fault on both sides. However this may be, there can be no doubt whatever that it is the duty of everyone when he has the chance to do what he can to ameliorate such a condition of things, and that must be my excuse for speaking as I do. As I am myself, in the technical sense, neither a working man nor an employer of labour, I feel free to say things which a member of either of these classes might refrain from saying for fear of being misinterpreted.

One of the causes of misunderstanding that seems to me to be most frequent is connected with labour-saving machinery. Every year has seen the invention, either in Great Britain, America, or elsewhere, of elaborate machines calculated to turn out with accuracy, despatch, and economy work which was formerly done entirely by hand. These machines are, many of them, extremely costly, and have to turn out a great deal of work before they repay the initial expenses of installation. I am not, of course, talking only of machines that can be employed in the binding trade—although there are many such—but of machines employed in all kinds of industries.

Now I have no hesitation in saying that a suspicion exists in the minds of a large number of employers that these machines are not allowed to produce as much work as they are capable of doing—in other words, that the operatives knowingly and intentionally restrict the output.

I do not for a moment assert that this suspicion is well founded. It may be, and on the other hand it may not. But I do say that it exists very widely, that it is the cause of a good deal of hard feeling on the part of employers towards the workers, and that, if it has no foundation in fact, it is of the utmost consequence that the minds of those who at present harbour it should be disabused.

If, on the other hand, there is something in this complaint, if, in fact, cases exist in which machines are not allowed to do their full quantum of work, then it should be the aim of everyone who has given thought to questions of economics to point out to those interested—that is to say, to those working the machines—that if they too will give careful consideration to the matter they will see that their action, while it may injure the owners of factories and the business of the country, can do them personally no good at all, but will, in the long run, do them harm.

It is very easy to see how at first sight it may appear that the introduction of a machine to do the work of a man must be an injury to an operative. If a machine which can be worked by one man can do the work of two, it is argued, it must have the result of throwing one man out of work. If this were true, surely the condition of the working man since the introduction of machinery would be worse than it was before, and the difficulty of finding work to do would be greater. What are the facts? The wages of the working classes and the standard of living are enormously higher now than during the earlier part of the last century, when machinery began to come into use. The wages are vastly higher, the cost of living is much lower, and the condition of the worker greatly better. The only country in the world in which wages are higher than in our own is the United States of America, the very country in which machinery is most widely used.

In view of these facts, and they are incontrovertible, it is useless to argue that the introduction of machinery is against the interests of the working classes. Indeed, I should be inclined to go farther and to say that the danger which threatens British trade, and with it of course the prosperity of all classes, whether employers or employed, is that through our incapacity and unwillingness to adapt ourselves to the conditions of the age, we may be beaten in the race by other nations, notably by the Americans, whose adaptability and readiness to take up new ideas is greater than our own. I do not believe that this will be the case, because I have much confidence in the character and good sense of the British race, but I am quite sure we cannot afford to go to sleep. To oppose the introduction of new machinery, or to fail to use it to the best advantage, is to go to sleep commercially.

I hope you will not think that I have wandered away from my subject, and that, instead of dilating on the merits of the Bookbinders' Pension and Asylum Society, I have taken the opportunity of delivering a lecture on political economy. If you do think so, I must ask you to pardon me, and to remember that the prosperity of the Bookbinders' Pension and Asylum Society depends on the prosperity of the working bookbinders who support it, and that the prosperity of working men depends to a very great extent on their holding sound views on questions of political economy.

Mr. W. Coffey moved the adoption of the report, and mentioned that during the past year 41 pensioners had been maintained at a cost of £1,180. He said that bookbinders had no objection to labour-saving machinery. Mr. C. F. Cook seconded the motion, which was unanimously adopted. Mr. Woodcock, Mr. Collier, and the Secretary, Mr. W. T. Rawlinson, took part in the proceedings. The election of seven new pensioners was announced.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

NO. 8.—JAMES LACKINGTON.

After some years of wandering about the country as a journeyman shoemaker he married an old sweetheart of his boyish days—one Nancy Smith, a dairymaid. They were married at St. Peter's, Bristol, in the year 1770–71; on searching their pockets after the marriage ceremony was over and the necessary expenses paid, they had just one halfpenny between them wherewith to begin the world. He laboured hard at his trade as a worker in stuff shoes and she earned a few shillings weekly in binding them. They worked together bravely and were very happy on a combined income of 10s. or 12s. a week. Soon, however, the wife fell ill and so continued for many months; she suffered excruciating agonies, with none of the comforts of life to aid her.

These sad times of sickness and starvation continued for more than two years. At last, with a view to getting a better price for his work, Lackington resolved to visit London. He reached the metropolis in August 1773 with the traditional half-crown in his pocket, and eventually found work with Mr. Heath in Fore Street. Notwithstanding his previous backsliding, his first inquiry was for Mr. Wesley's 'Gospel shops,' and on producing his class and band tickets he was duly admitted. In a month he saved money enough to bring his wife up to town, and it happened just about the same time he received intelligence of the death of his grandfather, who left him £10. He started off to Somersetshire to receive the money. On returning he lost about 16s., seemingly through a hole in his pocket, for he first discovered, while travelling on the coach, some of the silver dribbling through the basket on to the ground—he bore the loss with the equanimity of a philosopher, reasoning with Epictetus that he could not have lost it if he had never had it, and that as he had lost it, why, it was all the same as if it had never been in his possession.

But a sadder misfortune befell him on that cold coach journey; to keep out the bitter cold, he drank some purl and gin, which made him so drunk that the coachman put him inside the coach for fear of his falling off the roof. He there met a jovial set who also drank to keep out the cold; they were in high glee, and asked him to sing them a song; he at once complied, forgetting as he says that he was 'one of the holy brethren.'

By the time he reached home he had become sober, though in great perturbation of mind for what he had done—so ashamed was he that he concealed the affair from his wife 'that he might not grieve her righteous soul with the knowledge of so dreadful a fall'; fortunately before mounting the coach on his homeward journey he had sewn the bulk of his fortune in his clothes. His good wife ripped open the clothes which contained the treasure, and with a heart full of gratitude piously thanked Providence for the supply.

With this store of cash they purchased household goods, and they worked hard and lived still harder, so that in a short time they had a room nicely furnished with their own goods, so it fell out that on Christmas Eve they had only half-a-crown left to purchase their Christmas dinner. Lackington says that he often spent in books money which should have gone in buying food to eat. On this Christmas Eve his wife sent him out to buy their Christmas dinner. On passing a bookseller's shop he espied a copy of 'Young's Night Thoughts,' he forgot his dinner, down went the half-crown, and he hastened home vastly elated with his acquisition. When his wife asked him for the Christmas dinner, he told her it was in his pocket. 'How could you think of stuffing a joint of meat into your pocket?' He then began to harangue on the superiority of intellectual pleasures over sensual gratifications. It took him considerable time and much eloquence to convince his wife that it was far better to feast on 'Young's Night Thoughts' than on beef and pudding.

'And sacrifice your dinner to your books.'

It was in June 1774 that Mr. Boyd, one of Mr. Wesley's people, told him of a little shop and parlour behind it to be let in Featherstone Street, where he might get some work as a master. He decided at once to take the place and told Mr. Boyd that he would sell books there also. For several months he had observed a great increase in a certain old-book shop, and he felt persuaded that he knew as much about old books as the person who kept it. He considered that, being a lover of books, if he could but be a bookseller he should then have plenty of books to read, which was the greatest motive for him to make the attempt. His friend promised to get the shop for him, and added: 'When you are Lord Mayor you shall use all your interest to get me made an alderman.'

The shop was taken and opened on Midsummer Day 1774, with a stock worth five pounds, in Featherstone Street, St. Luke's. He was as well pleased to see his name over the door as was Nebuchadnezzar when he said 'Is not this great Babylon that I have built?' and his wife piously cautioned him against setting his mind too much on the riches of the world, and assured him that all was vanity.

Notwithstanding the obscurity of the street and the mean appearance of the shop, he soon found customers for what few books he had, and laid out the money in other 'old trash.' He borrowed five pounds from a fund which Wesley's people kept on purpose to lend out to such of their society whose characters were good—for three months without interest. This sum enabled him to increase his stock.

In this new establishment he and his wife lived very frugally; they dined on potatoes, and quenched their thirst with water.

They lived in this street for six months; by that time his stock had increased from £5 to £25. This immense stock he deemed too valuable to be buried in Featherstone Street, so he took a shop and parlour at No. 46 Chiswell Street; here he bade a final adieu to the gentle craft, and converted his little stock of leather into old books; his stock consisted chiefly of old divinity, and he had a great sale of such books as he approved of—for says he, 'such was my ignorance, bigotry, superstition (or what you please), that I conscientiously destroyed such books as fell into my hands which were written by free-thinkers.'

He went on prosperously till September 1775, when he was suddenly taken ill of a dreadful fever, and his wife was seized ten days after with the same disorder, and she died on the 9th of November. He says 'she was in reality one of the best of women, but enthusiastic in the extreme, and of course very superstitious, but as I was very far gone myself I did not think that a fault in her.'

He continued in the fever for many weeks and his life was despaired of; his wife died and was buried without his once having a sight of her; the nurses who were hired to attend to him and his wife robbed him of linen &c., and kept themselves drunk with gin while he lay in bed ready to perish owing to want of proper care.

When he was well enough to look after his affairs he found that two of his friends had saved him from ruin by locking up his shop which contained his all.

Soon after he returned to his shop he made the acquaintance of Miss Dorcas Turton, a young lady of good family who in days gone by had shown their goodness by dissipating large fortunes and estates, and Dorcas was reduced to keeping a school to support her father, who had gambled away a large fortune of his own and £20,000 of his wife's.

This young lady was immoderately fond of books; who then could be better suited for a bookseller's wife? Lackington proposed, was accepted, and they were married January 30, 1776, or little more than two months after the death of his first wife! To most people this would surely be regarded as indecent haste, but he only remarks quite coolly: 'Thus I repaired the loss of one very valuable woman by the acquisition of another still more valuable.'

Shortly after this he took up the 'Life of John Bunce'; and 'I know not,' says he, 'of any work more proper to be put into the hands of a poor ignorant superstitious Methodist.' The study of this valuable work formed the groundwork for a fresh attack on Methodism, which occupies above a hundred continuous pages of scurrilous abuse mixed up with filthy anecdotes.

His new wife's extreme love of books (novels chiefly) made her delight to be in the shop, so that she soon became perfectly acquainted with every part of it, and was a most valuable help in taking care of it during his absence. He now began to buy parcels of books, and found his trade so rapidly increasing in this direction that he was several times so hard pushed for cash to pay for them that he more than once pawned his watch and a suit of clothes, and sometimes he even pawned books to pay for others.

Early in 1778 Mr. John Denis became his partner, who found money to largely increase the stock of books, and the first catalogue of 12,000 volumes was issued by J. Lackington & Co. in 1779. After going on very pleasantly together for more than two years, Mr. Denis hinted that he thought Lackington was making purchases too fast—this led to considerable warmth on both sides, and consequently they dissolved partnership in May 1780. They parted in great friendship, and at his death soon afterwards Mr. Denis left behind him the best collection of scarce, valuable, mystical, and alchemical books that was ever collected by one person.

It was in this year 1780 that he resolved to give no person whatever any credit, an innovation in the ordinary custom of the trade which for the time caused him to be much laughed at and ridiculed; he was told that he might as well attempt to build the Tower of Babel as to establish a large business without giving credit; but he determined to make the experiment; he began by plain marking in every book facing the title the lowest price he would take for it; which being much lower than the common market prices, he not only retained his former customers but soon increased their numbers; but he had innumerable difficulties to encounter, as he would make no exception whatever, all his customers, 'even the nobility,' were treated alike—cash down, no credit. 'There were not wanting,' says he, 'among the booksellers some who were mean enough to assert that all my books were bound in sheep, and many other unmanly

artifices were practised, all of which, so far from injuring me, as basely intended, turned to my account.'

He says, with perhaps some truth and certainly with his usual conceit:

'In this branch of trade it is next to impossible for me ever to have any formidable rivals, as it requires an uncommon exertion as well as very uncommon success for many years together to rise to any degree of eminence in that particular line. This success must be attained, too, without the aid of novelty, which I find of very great service to me.'

In the first three years after he began the cash system his business increased, and the whole of his profit was expended in buying books, so that his Catalogue in 1784 was largely increased; it now contained 30,000 books, mostly of a much superior character to those of his first Catalogue. He now found a difficulty which he had not foreseen. Many of his customers were always ready to buy from him, but were not equally inclined to sell to him such books as they had for sale; they said, 'Lackington sells very cheap; he therefore will not give much for what is offered him,' he had difficulty in controverting this heresy, but he at length adopted the following plan to put the matter beyond a doubt:

'When I am called upon to purchase any library or parcel of books either myself or my assistants carefully examine them and if desired to fix a price I mention at a word the highest I will give for them, which I always take care is as much as any bookseller can afford to give, but if the seller entertains any doubts respecting the price offered and chooses to try other booksellers he pays me five per cent. for valuing the books, and as he knows what I valued them at he tries among the trade, and when he finds he cannot get any greater sum offered, on returning to me he not only receives the price I at first offered, but also return of the five per cent. paid me for the valuation.'

DEATH OF MR. WILLIAM NORTH, OF TEWKESBURY.

The death occurred on Monday morning last of Mr. William North, printer and publisher, of Tewkesbury, after a period of feeble health of about a year's duration. The deceased, who was in his 78th year, was one of the oldest tradesmen of the borough, and highly respected. He succeeded the late Mr. Jenner in business in 1871, before which he had for a long period filled the position of one of the heads of departments in the printing establishment of Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co., of London. He was much affected by the death of his old friend Mr. William Wilson, of Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co.'s, who had paid him a visit shortly before he died. A man of considerable ability and energy in the days when first he came to Tewkesbury, he soon extended the business. Among the earlier publications from his office were the two popular works of the late Rev. W. S. Symonds, 'Malvern Chase' and 'Hanley Castle,' which have passed through many editions, and of which he held the copyright. He also published other volumes treating of the associations of the town and district, among which may be mentioned the Rev. J. H. Blunt's 'Tewkesbury Abbey and its Associations,' and 'Deerhurst: a Parish of Gloucestershire,' by the Rev. George Butterworth. Besides these there were many guides and handbooks relating to the town and neighbourhood, all of which have commanded a large sale. Mr. North held the office of hon. secretary and treasurer of Tewkesbury Dispensary for nearly thirty years, and since 1874 had been distributor of stamps. He was a member of the Burial Board until its reconstruction came about. He was a sidesman of Tewkesbury Abbey, and one of the oldest members of the Abbey Restoration Committee. He was associated with the late Mr. Frederick Moore in the printing and publication of the Tewkesbury Register, and it is a mournful circumstance that both editor and printer have passed away within fifteen months. Mrs. North survives her husband, and he leaves also a son and two daughters. The son, Mr. W. North, jun., has been associated with his father for some years in the business and continues to carry on the same.

THE WILLIAM BLACK MEMORIAL.

The handsome castellated tower which was erected on the island of Mull, Argyllshire, in memory of the late William Black, and as a beacon-light for the guidance of mariners, has just been completed. The Northern Lights Commissioners have now placed thereon a group-flashing light, showing at night three flashes in quick succession every fifteen seconds. The light is 45ft. above high water, and visible about twelve nautical miles in clear weather. The tower, which cost over £800, is erected amid scenes in which the late novelist took especial delight, and is in the track of the steamers conveying thousands of tourists annually between Oban, the sacred isle of Iona, and the natural sea-girt caves of Staffa.

ASSOCIATED BOOKSELLERS.

FORMATION OF A NORTH-EASTERN SECTION.

In response to a circular issued at the instance of Messrs. R. J. Porteus and W. H. Robinson, a representative meeting of Northern booksellers was held at the Vegetarian Café, Nelson Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Wednesday, April 17. There were present: Messrs. R. J. Porteus, W. H. Robinson, Blackie (Messrs. Mawson, Swan & Morgan), Symonds (Wesleyan Book Room), Banks (School Furnishing Co.), Middleton (Bible and Tract Depot), Allan, Pembrey (Messrs. W. E. Franklin), Brash (Messrs. Crowe & Brash), Newcastle; Patterson (Messrs. Hills & Co.), Chapman (School Furnishing Co.), W. Coates, Sunderland; Moore, Hexham; Mark Smith, Alnwick; T. W. Rapp, Saltburn; and Chapman (School Furnishing Co.), Darlington. Mr. Porteus occupied the chair, and urged the advisability of a combination of local booksellers for the purpose of safeguarding their trade interests, and spoke of the good work accomplished by the parent Association and its local branches. Mr. J. Brierley, of Leeds, who with Mr. Patterson courteously responded to an invitation to attend the meeting, gave a résumé of the progress of the movement generally, and described what had been accomplished in his own district. Mr. Patterson's speech had particular reference to his own organisation in Sunderland. The remarks of these gentlemen were received with enthusiasm. After discussion, it was unanimously agreed to form 'The North-Eastern Booksellers' Association,' which will include the booksellers of Northumberland, Durham, and Teesside.

The following officers were elected:—Mr. R. J. Porteus, chairman; Mr. L. E. Robinson, secretary; Mr. W. Blackie, treasurer; and an executive committee of six.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

At the last monthly meeting of the Board, Mr. C. J. Longman in the chair, the sum of £97. 15s. 8d. was voted for the relief of 57 members and widows of members.

Philip (Philip, Son & Nephew, Liverpool) completed his 50th year in connection with the firm; and on April 19 the occasion was celebrated by a Soirée Dansante, to which all the assistants and apprentices in the firm's employ were invited. The affair passed off most successfully.

REASONS FOR THE EXCOMMUNICATION OF TOLSTOI.

The Börsenblatt reproduces from the St. Petersburg Gazette the wording of the decree by which the Holy Synod has excommunicated Count Leo Tolstoi from the Russian Orthodox Church. It runs as follows: 'In his works and letters, which are circulated by himself and his disciples all over the world, but especially within the borders of our dear Fatherland, he preaches with the zeal of a fanatic the abrogation of all dogmas of the Orthodox Church and of the real existence of the Christian faith, of a personal God, who is worshipped in the Holy Trinity, the Creator and Upholder of the universe, denies the Lord Jesus Christ, the God-Man, the Saviour and Redeemer of the world, who suffered for us men and for our salvation and rose from the dead, denies the immaculate conception at the incarnation of Christ the Lord and the pure virginity of the holy mother of God, the Holy Virgin Mary, before and after birth, does not believe in the life after death and in a judgment, rejects all the sacraments of the Church and in the abundantly blessed operation of the Holy Spirit in them, and has not feared, since he has scorned the most holy articles of the belief of orthodox people, to take upon himself to mock at the greatest of sacraments, the holy sacrament of the Mass. All this Count Leo Tolstoi continually preaches in words and writings (in Wort und Schrift) to the scandal and abhorrence of the whole Orthodox world; and has thereby not secretly but openly before all knowingly and purposely fallen away from all communion with the Orthodox Church. Attempts that have been made for his conversion remained without effect. Therefore the Church does not recognise him as a member and cannot recognise him as such until he repents and renews his membership.'

THE BOOKS IN THE HOUSE.

We find the following excellent advice in the April number of the Books of To-day and the Books of To-morrow, edited by Arthur Pen- denys, and published by Messrs. Hatchards, of Piccadilly. It ought to be printed in large type and hung up in every booksellers' shop for the benefit of their customers.—ED. P.C.

1. Sell the books you do not want, and with the proceeds make your library up to date.
2. Get your library properly catalogued, so that you may know what books you have and where to find them.
3. Keep your library in good repair. No library will look well when the bindings are tattered and broken.
4. Have your paper novels bound in linen, and your better books bound in leather.
5. Place a book-plate or book-label in all your books.
6. Obtain a good atlas, a good biographical dictionary, and a good verbal dictionary.
7. Try to find out about the many good books which you have never yet seen. Make your books your hobby.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'Adam Bede,' by George Eliot. This volume is the first of George Eliot's novels in the new style, red cloth limp and gilt top, to be published under the general title of 'The Warwick Edition.' The paper used in the series is of a special make—as thin as India paper and very opaque. The size of the page is 4 × 6½. The works, of which there are eight in all, will be issued in ten volumes; that is, 'Middlemarch' and 'Daniel Deronda' occupy two volumes each, all the others are complete in one volume. The volumes may truly be said to be a pleasure to read and to handle. They will be issued monthly, beginning with 'Adam Bede' in March, and ending with 'Daniel Deronda,' two volumes, in October.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Pintoricchio,' by Evelyn Marsh Phillipps. In the latest contribution to 'The Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture' series, Miss Phillipps has followed very much the lines of treatment laid down by her predecessors. The first chapter is devoted to biographical details, then follows a description of Pintoricchio's pictures and the conditions of time and circumstance under which they were produced, and finally we have a catalogue of his works, arranged according to the galleries where they are exhibited, with a chronological table. According to the author, 'there is in the art of Pintoricchio a direct simplicity of expression and gesture that saves him from conventionality and cloying sweetness. His persons are not above criticism as far as technicalities are concerned, but they have in them this, that they are occupied and absorbed in the business in hand. You may fancy at first that they are artificial, but that is merely their environment; they themselves are simple, they do not pose or look upwards or out of the picture with an affected appeal for admiration. This quality gives to Pintoricchio a truthfulness where he lacks depth.' The volume is illustrated with a number of reproductions of the artist's chief works.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'In Memoriam,' by Alfred, Lord Tennyson, edited with a commentary by Arthur W. Robinson, B.D. It is pleasant to meet such an old and highly venerated friend in suitable garb like this. Paper, print, and binding are equally excellent, and the volume, in the neatness of its production, is a distinct credit to the publishers. Of course the main feature in this edition is the explanatory editorship of Mr. Robinson, which in all respects is dictated by a thorough and appreciative knowledge of his subject. Tennyson's great poem has never been presented in a more elucidatory form.

From the same.—'Science and Mediæval Thought,' the Harveian oration delivered before the Royal College of Physicians, October 18, 1900, by Thomas Clifford Allbutt, M.A., M.D. The gravity of the occasion on which this address was delivered has evidently not been without its influence on Professor Allbutt, and accordingly we find him just a trifle heavy, and rigidly academic. But the essay itself reveals traces of much close study, coupled with a more natural knowledge of the subject. It will without doubt be found very interesting by all who are concerned in the early history of medicine.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—'The Sea Wolves,' by Max Pemberton. Mr. Pemberton has seldom written anything more startling in its realistic intensity than this story of a woman wrecker; and now that the work has been added to Messrs. Cassell's 'People's Edition of Famous Books,' issued at a popular price, we may be sure that its pages will be eagerly devoured by a largely increased number of readers.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'Through Siberia,' by J. Stadling; edited by F. H. H. Guillemard, M.A. When Mr. Stadling consented, in the early part of 1898, at the request of the Swedish Geographical Society, to take command of a small party of explorers who were to proceed to the north of Siberia in search of any traces of the ill-fated Andrée expedition, he brought certain special qualifications to his task. He had had, in the first place, much experience of foreign travel, and was particularly well acquainted with Russia, having previously visited the country on several occasions, and being greatly interested in the people and their struggle for civil freedom. He also possessed a good knowledge of the language, and was thus in the best possible manner equipped for the journey of which this handsome volume is a record. The intention was to investigate the coast line east and west of the mouth of the Lena and the New Siberian Islands, and to make inquiry if anything had been seen of Andrée and his companions among the nomadic tribes of the Tundras. On April 20, 1898, therefore, the little expedition left Stockholm for St. Petersburg, thence travelling over the Trans-Siberian Railway with a crowd of emigrants to Tulun, afterwards by road to Irkutsk, and so to the banks of the Upper Lena, down which the party were to travel by steamer. In this connection Mr. Stadling has much that is interesting to say about the Taiga or vast masses of forest land through which they passed; the various native tribes they made acquaintance with—the Yakuts, Skoptsi, Voyevodes, Tunguses, Lodkas, &c.; and the novel experiences that befell the party between Yakutsk and the Lower Lena. Arrived at the delta of the river, the difficulties of the explorers increased, and being frozen in on Kangelak, a small island in the Arctic Sea, they stood a chance of sharing the fate of the crew of the 'Jeannette,' who perished of cold and starvation within a few miles of this very spot in 1887. Happily, however, released from this danger, the travellers made their way across the Tundra to the Anabar and thence to the Katanga, spent some time among the Shamans, and then crossed the Taimyr Peninsula to the Yenisei river, up which they passed on sledges. The remaining chapters the author devotes to a summary of the more practical impressions produced on him by his journey. Unfortunately, all his observations point to the lamentable effects of the official corruption which is eating the heart out of all progress; and what mischief is left undone, as Mr. Guillemard puts it, is completed by the trader and vodka. The volume is attractively illustrated from photographs of great interest, and is further supplied with two maps.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Irish Leaves: Poems and Songs,' by John Robinson, B.A. We have been principally struck in turning over the pages of Mr. Robinson's book by the unequal character of his muse. On some occasions he rises to the height of considerable poetic inspiration; at other moments he is commonplace indeed. Rather more attention paid to revision and the elimination of weaker passages would have rendered his work infinitely more attractive. But here experience in authorship steps in, and of this Mr. Robinson, as we judge, has had little. But his present venture should certainly do nothing to discourage him, and we could quote many passages, did our space permit, that are noticeable for their beauty and poetic expression.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden.—'Studies in Field Engineering,' by Lieut.-Colonel Wilkinson J. Shaw, P.S.C., M.A. This work is intended to inform and help officers of the regular forces preparing for promotion, and Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteer officers desirous of passing the half-yearly voluntary practical examinations in field engineering, which practical examinations take place at the end of the candidates' paper work and occupy seven days. The manual is divided into seven days, each dealing with a separate subject: Spars and bridging; demolishing and repairing bridges; defence of building with enclosure walls; railway station; defence of a village; encampments and cantonments; defence of a position. A very useful appendix gives estimates of time and labour for items of field engineering work. The manual is illustrated by ten useful sketches and plans, and is also provided with a full index. The author has given a plain and straightforward account of the manner in which instruction was imparted by himself to a class of officers at his own residence, and this is calculated to be most helpful to candidates. Lieut.-Col. Wilkinson Shaw's concise 'Studies' form a volume of Gale & Polden's useful 'Military' series.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'A Book of the Poster,' by W. S. Rogers. Mr. Rogers laments that the poster artist is not allowed to work according to his own sweet will, unfettered by the wishes of the advertiser. On the Continent, no doubt, better ideas in regard to art prevail, and this will account for the superiority in poster-designing. Still we can show some very creditable efforts in this country, of which Mr. Rogers's volume supplies several interesting reproductions. The work of Dudley Hardy, Cecil Aldin, and Hassall, for instance, may well compare with anything done abroad, and there are other artists less known to fame whose merits are deserving of even greater recognition. The chief interest of Mr. Rogers's book lies in the illustrations, to which his text acts as a kind of explanatory guide. In addition to the artists already mentioned, examples are given of Chas. E. Dawson, Hal Hurst, A. Beardsley, Bernard Partridge, H. Ryland, W. Crane, W. S. Rogers, Gordon Craig, Musha, Lewis Baumer, Chéret, E. Grasset, Arpad Basch, Steinlen, H. Meunier, and others. The volume is very attractive, but it might, we think, have been made even still more representative.

From Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.—'The Eternal Quest,' by John A. Steuart. Mr. Steuart's progress as a novelist has been steadily onward from the time he wrote 'In the Day of Battle,' each of his works having improved upon its immediate predecessor. His new book is an extremely clever piece of writing, and will, certainly, add to his reputation. 'The Eternal Quest'—by which we take it is meant the universal pursuit after love and reputation—contains a simple, clearly outlined plot, yet one fraught with the most momentous crises. In a Highland hamlet two old cronies live, the one a retired General, the other an erstwhile Army Chaplain. The son of the former, a lieutenant in the famous Black Watch, falls in love—as we are sure no young man under similar circumstances could help doing—with the charming, sweet-natured minister's daughter; and from this an exceedingly interesting train of events arises. The Rev. Mr. Carmichael is not himself adverse to the match, but he is under the stern discipline of his old military commander, the General, who sees in poverty an invincible obstacle to the alliance. So the lover, after the usual vows of undying devotion, goes out with his regiment to India, and is there concerned in some stirring exploits on the North-West frontier, these only being a prelude to further achievements in Central and South Africa. An unsuccessful rival in love, one Archibald Buchanan, originally intended for the ministry, but who drifts into the army, and afterwards becomes an exceptionally gifted war correspondent, also occupies a prominent place in the narrative. The war scenes in which these two take part afford Mr. Steuart an excellent opportunity of showing his mastery of descriptive writing, and they are to our mind the best chapters in the book. He also displays an unwonted power of depicting womanly character, both Marjorie Carmichael and the two mothers, Mrs. Carmichael and Mrs. Buchanan, being portrayed with great tenderness and homely realism. The humour of the story is mainly supplied by a gardener and a watchman, natives of Aberfourie. We have not sketched the plot of 'The Eternal Quest' any further because the book thoroughly deserves to be read. Mr. Steuart's firmness of touch, study of character, and unfailing industry in execution are prominent as ever, though the material he has taken in hand may be less promising; and his story well deserves to be classed with the brilliant array of novels that already stand to his credit.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'From a Swedish Homestead,' by Selma Lagerlöf. Translated by Jessie Bröchner. This is a book that will appeal strongly to the lover of fanciful stories. It is not exactly a collection of fairy literature, but something that appertains closely to this designation. 'The Story of a Country House,' which heads the collection, relates the case of Gunnar Hede, the owner of a place called Munkhyttan, situated in a poor parish in the forests of Vesterdalarne. To his inheritance Hede was greatly attached. Had it not been so he would have gone into the outside world and made a reputation for himself by his musical abilities, of which he possessed no small share. As it was, he had certain traits of disposition, bequeathed him by his ancestors, to combat with, and so he gave up his life to the family property—and went mad. In this desperate strait he was succoured by a dainty winsome girl, with large impressive eyes, whom he had formerly met when she was touring with a couple of street performers. In the madman that he had become she did not at first recognise the handsome student who unconsciously made such an impression on her youthful heart, but ultimately it all came home to her. The story ends happily, as all such fanciful romances should do. The other contents of the volume are of similar kind, and all are distinguished by a refinement and delicacy of treatment that should raise them high in the estimation of readers.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'Our Family Portraits and other Sketches,' by W. Clinton Ellis. The author of the seven stories contained in this volume is stated to be a new writer; but there are no signs of inexperience in his work, and the tales are told as by one to the manner born. 'Our Family Portraits,' which opens the volume and gives the title to it, is not the best in the collection. We much prefer the history of Pietro, the poor violinist and musical enthusiast, who is befriended by the successful and wealthy Swiss cuisinier, Anatole Poggi, and after a long probation and anxious waiting obtains at last, through his patron's intercession, an opportunity of playing in public before a distinguished auditory; but is so intoxicated by success that the excitement causes him to forget a promise he had made to his patron, and brings about a fatal termination. Another clever and very amusing story, called 'Write me Down an Ass,' is extremely comical. Indeed, all these tales repay perusal, and are of varied and unusual interest.

From Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.—'The Children and the Drink.' In this pamphlet the evils arising from the drink traffic, as particularly exemplified in the case of children, are set forth. The work practically embodies the results of an inquiry which has been conducted by a committee under the chairmanship of the Bishop of Hereford. Part I. goes to show that intemperance is largely though not exclusively responsible for the frequent crime of cruelty to children, while Part II. dwells on other forms of child suffering, which are wholly or in part traceable to drink. In Part III. the question of the prohibition of sale to children is discussed. The Archbishop of Canterbury in his short preface points out that the compilers of the pamphlet put its subject-matter clearly before all readers without 'exaggeration of statement or vehemence of denunciation,' but it must be confessed that we doubt if this praise is completely merited.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Poems,' by Alexander Blair Thaw. Most of these poems have previously appeared in the columns of magazines on the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Thaw possesses a true spirit of poetry, and many of his outpourings are especially beautiful, though here and there a conventional idea obtrudes itself. It is thus that he sings of 'Poetry':—

'I fain would serve thee well, with skill in craft
To send each arrow singing to its aim.
But, oh! that some true breath of life may waft
My words in secret ways, unknown to fame,
So that to one warm heart some slender shaft
Bear its swift message from Life's central flame.'

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'Italian Influences,' by Eugene Schuyler, Ph.D., LL.D. In our last issue we noticed a volume of selected essays by Mr. Schuyler, and commented on an interesting memoir of the author which accompanied them. It was there pointed out that he had spent some time in Italy. The present volume records some of the more notable impressions made upon him during his stay, and the directions in which his thoughts led him from association with surrounding objects. Most of these papers have a distinct literary bearing, and all are brightly and pleasantly written; very agreeably showing Mr. Schuyler in the character of a man of wide reading and refined tastes, with a considerable gift for the effective refurbishing of old material. Among the subjects he so delightfully discourses upon are 'Londor and Italy,' 'Dickens in Genoa,' 'The University of Bologna after Eight Centuries,' 'Bologna in the Last Century,' 'Shelley and Byron,' 'George Sand in Italy,' 'Smollett in Search of Health,' 'Madame de Staël,' 'The Italy of Hawthorne,' &c. &c. Strangely enough, we find him warmly appreciating the merits of Dickens's 'Pictures from Italy,' a book which scarcely stands high in the estimation of readers in this country, though perhaps something of this is due to the egotistical style. Of the 'Imaginary Conversations,' Mr. Schuyler writes: 'Although Landor fondly and vainly imagined that he had never made one of his characters utter a word such as the man himself would not have used, all that he really did was to write dialogue between Landor himself and a man of wood or straw, whom he tried to make different from himself, but who still resembled him at least as much as his own brother, whose works he said were sometimes taken for his own.' The entire work is one of much interest, and the large clear type will certainly add to the enjoyment of the reader.

From the same.—'Good Housekeeping' thoroughly maintains the high standard with which it started, and in the April (or Easter) number presents its readers with many articles of practical value and interest. 'A Possible Solution of the Domestic Service Problem' will, we are sure, be eagerly turned to by all thrifty housewives, while in 'Notes of an Extravagant Season,' 'Plans for the Season's Weddings,' 'The Informal Luncheon,' and 'Dishes in Casserole' (the casserole being a porcelain or earthen utensil, with either one or two handles, having somewhat the appearance of a covered saucepan), we are equally certain fair readers will find much to interest them. The number is usefully illustrated.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'A History of English Literature,' by E. J. Mathew. It has been a genuine pleasure to dive into the recesses of this book, and if students can only be infected with some of the enthusiasm that has guided our own explorations, then great will be the value of the manual indeed. Of course it would be easy to pick holes in Professor Mathew's work. Rather more than necessary attention has been devoted to one branch of the subject here, rather less there; while occasionally the writing is a little loose and disjointed. But, take it as a whole, he has performed his task well. A concise survey of the conditions of English literature prior to Chaucer's time—that is, in the fourth and ten following centuries—leads us to an excellent account of that author and his poems, and so we gradually work our way through an array of brilliant writers—Spenser, Shakspeare, Jonson, Milton, Dryden, Swift, Addison, Steele, Defoe, Pope, Dr. Johnson, Savage, Goldsmith, William Collins, Gray, Richardson, Smollett, Sterne, and so on—to the present day. Mr. Mathew's method has usually been to give a brief history of the period, and then to supplement this with an extended account of its more prominent authors. Coming to our own times, he seems a little out of sympathy with Dickens, but has a manifest admiration for Thackeray. Noting this we are not so surprised, as we otherwise should be, to find that Charles Reade is dismissed in a few lines, whilst Anthony Trollope has rather better than two pages devoted to him. Carlyle, Charlotte Brontë, and George Eliot receive full justice at his hands. Speaking of the fiction of the nineteenth century the author says: 'The earlier and middle years of the Queen's reign showed a power of creative imagination after which recent years have toiled in vain. This is probably due to a morbid discontent which has spread among certain sections of the community; and a good deal of the later modern fiction appears to be the production of dissatisfied people uncertain of their own position.' In this expression of opinion we are sure most readers will concur.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Third Floor,' by Mrs. Henry Dudeney. This strikingly original story introduces us to very unconventional characters, most of whom reside in one and the same house situated in Great Ormond Street, the third floor of which tenement is occupied by a young lady called Valencia Dorrell, the heroine. Valencia had been all her life at school, which she had left only six weeks before the story opens, when her lawyer wrote to say that her education was finished, rooms had been taken for her, and that she was to have a quarterly allowance. She is not to invite any of her school-girl friends to stay with her; does not know who her parents were or are; does not think she ever had any relations; and is just beginning to get an idea of family life from the pictures on the walls of her suite of three rooms, which had been handsomely furnished for her by she knew not whom. All this she artlessly confides to Philip Gurney, a young architect of refinement, culture, and opulence—at least, so he ranked at the house in Great Ormond Street. She had made his acquaintance on the staircase, when going to fetch water from the basement, and had asked if he would mind filling the bedroom jug for her. This he does and carries it up to her room, and then she confides her story to him. Needless to say, Philip falls in love with Valencia. There are others who fall in love with her. Marmaduke Merry, the journalist, for instance, who explains: 'By Jove! I might make copy of our third floor. There's scope there!' Merry was one of Bushell's young men. Everyone knew Bushell, that mammoth of enterprise who had revolutionised journalism and bred for his especial service an army of industrious, unscrupulous young writers. 'He was Bushell's young man. But Bushell was only a stepping stone. Some day he meant to be a mammoth himself.' Another happily conceived character is Roakes, the unsuccessful playwright who wrote plays no manager would produce. 'Roakes declined to work for Bushell. Merry made him sorrowful. His slang, his deliberate attempt to be vulgar, in order, as he said, to get the right tone, to gratify the public taste, were depressing. He looked at the popular side of things. When he wrote an article he had the working man in his eye, or the working woman. He played down to the office boy, who is having a literature created especially for him.' As the story proceeds we find that although Roakes objects to write for Bushell, he does not object to sponge upon his kind-hearted friend Merry, Bushell's young man. Then there is the Rev. Cyprian Symons, who declared the good died out of the Church at the Reformation, hated preaching to fools, and was an excellent judge of old silver. His final developments will be found in the book. Then come Mrs. Patience Penrice, the queen of serious society, a prominent personage in the tale; Brian Heather, the poet, 'who had been a brilliant, erratic meteor just flashed across the sky of letters and died swiftly out'; Archibald Gurney, Philip's father, an architectural pedant full of self-conceit; and the good-natured Selina Hebbway, another of Bushell's staff. While the talk of the rather Bohemian personages who figure in this book is extremely clever and amusing, there is no lack of incident, and the reader will follow with growing interest Valencia's persistent endeavours to discover her parents, which are at last crowned with success, and everything ends to the satisfaction of everybody. This is one of the brightest and most entertaining stories we have met with for some time, and the reader who does not enjoy it must be hard to please.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Wild Wales, its People, Language, and Scenery,' by George Borrow. This new volume of the complete authoritative edition of George Borrow's works is in no wise inferior to its predecessors. There is a wonderful freshness and charm in George Borrow, whether he is describing the men or mountains, or relating interviews with persons he encountered during his peregrinations in Wild Wales. Mr. A. S. Hartrick's admirable illustrations accentuate Borrow's descriptions. We can scarcely imagine a more desirable tourist's companion to the places visited by Borrow during his Welsh tour than this delightful volume, which abounds in matter of the most varied interest.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Lord Rosebery: Imperialist,' by J. A. Hammerton. Mr. Hammerton has contributed to the 'New Century Leaders' series an impartial and pleasingly written history of the career of the popular statesman who has had the rare and well-merited good fortune to gain the suffrages of the two great political parties in the State. The author has evidently spared no pains to accumulate authentic information about the Earl of Rosebery, and has known how to make good use of his material. Readers may rest assured that they will be well repaid for the perusal of this memoir, not the least interesting portion of which is that devoted to the Earl's ancestors. An excellent portrait from a photograph by Elliot & Fry adds value to the book.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'Hansina Hinz: a True Story of the Moravian Missions in Greenland,' from the German of H. G. Schneider, translated freely by E. F. K. This account of a life devoted to the service of God is exceedingly affecting in its unstudied simplicity, and it also supplies a very vivid idea of the hardships and dangers to which missionary workers in Greenland were formerly subjected. We write in the past tense because we understand that the Moravian Mission in Greenland, first started in 1733, has now been discontinued, it having been decided, for certain well-considered reasons, to hand over the Mission to the Danish State Church; and accordingly all the workers were last year withdrawn.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'A Bear Squeeze; or, Her Second Self,' by M. McDonnell Bodkin. There is plenty of movement in Mr. Bodkin's novel, and the scenes are varied and animated, if a trifle roughly constructed. However, this last feature is not likely to disturb the equanimity of readers who prefer vigour of incident and bustling action to any deeper study of life and character. The main interest is centred in the doings of an unscrupulous company promoter, one Walter Covan, who seeks to plant the 'Hunter's Grave Gold Mine' on an unsuspecting speculative public, and unhesitatingly utilises all his friends in the transaction. One married lady to whom he has paid much attention, though he is actually anxious to marry her daughter, he persuades to fill in a blank cheque of her husband's for £2,000; but happily the latter in the end proves more than a match for him, and villainy is left at the mercy of virtue.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'What Men Call Love: a Story of South Africa in the Days of Cetewayo,' by Lucas Cleeve. There is a slight falling off in this novel from some of the author's previous works. It is not so powerful, for instance, as 'The World's Black-mail.' Yet in its own way it possesses certain well-defined attractions. The plot, if slight, is of that direct character which readily absorbs the attention of more unsophisticated readers, and the emotions under which the various personages labour are sufficiently human and intelligible as to command deep sympathy. Most of us could point to counterparts of the weak, selfish Captain Clive in real life, while the deep enduring affection of Margaret Clive, firm in its resistance to all trials, is certainly not unknown to general experience. But we think it is sacrificing probability a little too much to effect to represent George at the conclusion, after the bad treatment of his wife, as something of a reformed character, for we may be sure that to such a man lazy self-enjoyment, with its accompanying disregard of other people's feelings, becomes too habitual a companion ever to be thoroughly shaken off.

NEW EDITIONS.—A second edition, revised and brought down to date, has been published by Mr. Andrew Baxendine, Edinburgh, of 'The One Pound Note: its History, Place, and Power in Scotland, and its Adaptability for England,' by William Baird, F.S.A. This treatise, it will be remembered, was originally published in 1885 as an analysis of the evidence given in 1875 by leading bankers in England, Scotland, and Ireland before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, such evidence largely turning on the merits and demerits of the Scotch system of banking as compared with that of England. It is to the banking fraternity, therefore, that the book chiefly appeals, and in such circles we have no doubt a new edition will be heartily welcomed.—Mr. Edward Stanford has sent out a fifth and revised edition of Mr. William Thynne Lynn's little work on 'Remarkable Eclipses, a Sketch of the most Interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.'—We have received from Mr. David Nutt a copy of the sixth edition, enlarged and thoroughly revised, of 'Travellers' Colloquial French: a Handbook for English-Speaking Travellers and Students,' by Howard Swan. The book contains idiomatic French phrases, with the exact phonetic pronunciation, represented on a new system based upon a scientific analysis of French sounds, and other general information useful to travellers in France. The wide success which has attended the publication of this little volume is the best testimony to its valuable and practical character.—To their neatly produced 'Library of Devotion' Messrs. Methuen & Co. have added 'Lyra Apostolica,' edited by H. C. Beeching, M.A., with an interesting introduction by Canon Scott Holland. In a general commendation of this tasteful edition, special mention should be made of the thoughtful 'critical note' by Professor Beeching.

The Publishers' Weekly

Established in 1872, with which was incorporated the American Literary Gazette and Publishers' Circular (established in 1852), is recognised as the independent representative of the publishing and bookselling interests in the United States.

The central feature of the paper, that makes it an indispensable aid to the book trade, to libraries, and to literary people, is its Bibliographical Department. Every possible facility of reference is afforded by a combination of methods which records the books by the week, the month, the season, and the year, under the author, the publisher, the title, the subject, and the class.

The Literary Department includes comprehensive intelligence as to books forthcoming and publishing movements at home and abroad, editorial discussions on book and trade subjects, original contributions, notes on catalogues, notes on auction sales, journalistic notes, business notes, literary and trade notes, &c.

A minor, but practical and convenient, feature is the 'Books Wanted' column, giving subscribers an opportunity, under the most favourable circumstances, to search for books which may be out of print or unobtainable through the regular channels.

Subscription price, postage prepaid, $4 a year. Advertising rates on application.

From the same office are published: 'The American Catalogue,' 'The Publishers' Trade List Annual,' 'The American Educational Catalogue,' 'The Annual Literary Index,' The Library Journal, Literary News, and other bibliographical aids. Send for Booklet.

WALTER SCOTT'S LIST

The Contemporary Science Series

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d. each; some vols. 6s.

Price 6s. With 93 Illustrations.

THE MEDITERRANEAN RACE

By Professor SERGI.

In this book, which is almost entirely new, and has been specially prepared by the author for the 'Contemporary Science Series,' Professor Sergi has presented the first full statement of the facts and views that—since he first brought them forward five years ago—have done so much to revolutionise the Aryan question. The evidence there contained tends to show that the race inhabiting Southern Europe and Northern Africa formerly occupied, and to some extent still occupies, the greater part of Central and Northern Europe, including the British Isles, and has played the chief part in European civilisation.

NEW EDITION OF IBSEN'S PROSE DRAMAS

Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER.

In the new edition each play will form a volume by itself. The typographical features of the original Norwegian edition will, so far as possible, be reproduced. The names of the characters will be placed above their speeches instead of in the same line, thus giving the page a lighter and more attractive appearance. Each volume will contain a frontispiece, representing, as a rule, one of the leading characters as embodied by a well-known actor or actress.

PROPOSED MEMORIAL TO MR.

R. D. BLACKMORE,

AUTHOR OF 'LORNA DOONE.'

Mr. Eden Phillpotts, in his notice of the late Mr. R. D. Blackmore in 'The Literary Year-Book' for 1901, expressed the hope that 'an adequate memorial of Mr. Blackmore may shortly be established,' and the editor, Mr. Herbert Morrah, thus referred to the matter: 'Here we are anxious simply to commend the appeal made elsewhere in this volume by a distinguished novelist. . . . Already a movement is on foot in his own county of Devon to erect a memorial which shall help men of later generations the more easily to recall those services which he rendered to our own.'

In our notice of the Year-Book we mentioned that the suggestion had been made, and asked for particulars of the 'movement which was on foot.' It then appeared that there was no 'movement on foot,' merely a suggestion in the air.

We have since received the following practical suggestion from a great admirer of the author of 'Lorna Doone,' Mr. James Baker:—

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

Sewelle Villa, Clifton:

April 12, 1901.

DEAR SIR,—Your articles on 'The Literary Year-Book' have given publicity to the fact that Mr. Eden Phillpotts has been suggesting that a memorial should be raised to Mr. R. D. Blackmore.

As one who had the honour and delightful pleasure of calling Mr. Blackmore friend—how kindly, genial, and sympathetic a friend he was!—will you allow me to state that shortly after his death I received a letter from an American friend of Mr. Blackmore, one whom I first met at the little house at Teddington, and in his letter he suggests to me how appropriate it would be if some memorial of Mr. Blackmore could be erected in Exeter Cathedral; it would be a shrine to which many an American would resort, to pay homage to the life work of a great writer; and this gentleman, Mr. Albert Whitin, Whitinsville, Mass., will receive subscriptions in America for this monument. At the time I was writing articles on Mr. Blackmore's life for the Fortnightly Review and the Leisure Hour, and I suggested to Mr. W. L. Courtney that this American proposition should appear in a note at the end of my article; but that article has not yet appeared (the Leisure Hour article appeared in April 1900), and so the matter has been in abeyance; but I dare say my American friend would be glad to join in with any committee who were wishing to do just honour to so pure and noble an idealist and writer. How great a writer Blackmore was is only known to those who study his works for the quaint wit and genial philosophy and sharp insight into human nature ever rippling over in his books. Like Hamlet, many of them are packed with incisive 'quotations,' but the story-reader sees nought of this; but he, and she, enjoy such books as 'Lorna,' 'Springhaven,' and 'Darial' for the interest and excitement of the story. If Mr. Eden Phillpotts will give me an idea of his scheme, if he wishes our mighty western brother to join in homage to R. D. Blackmore, I will send on to Mr. Whitin, and I feel sure some good results will issue from combining America with England in the memorial.

I am,

Yours faithfully,

JAMES BAKER.

P.S.—Since receiving proof of the above, I have had a kindly letter from Mr. Eden Phillpotts falling in with the above proposal, and concluding with the words, 'I hope a strong move will now be made, and need not say that anything and everything in my power will be done to help the cause.'

Before publishing Mr. Baker's letter we thought it would be well to ascertain if the representatives of Mr. Blackmore were favourable to the proposed Memorial in Exeter Cathedral, and we are glad to say that they welcome the idea, only stipulating that the artist to be employed should be Mr. Harry Hems, of Exeter.

We have since ascertained that Mr. Hems will be glad to carry out the work, and also that the Dean and Chapter of Exeter Cathedral are willing to permit its erection.

Mr. Eden Phillpotts has promised us that he will give the movement all the support in his power.

Mr. R. B. Marston has been asked and has agreed to act as Hon. Treasurer and Hon. Secretary of the Memorial Fund, and he suggests that the Memorial should take the form of a Marble Tablet with a medalion portrait and a suitable inscription, and that any balance after defraying its cost should be invested for the benefit of the Authors' Benevolent Fund which has recently been established in connection with the Society of Authors.

A subscription list will be opened presently, and all subscriptions received will be acknowledged in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. Those who are willing to aid the movement are requested to send their names to Mr. R. B. Marston, Hon. Sec., R. D. Blackmore Memorial Fund, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Limited, will publish early in May a new volume of verse, by Mr. George Meredith, entitled 'A Reading of Life and other Poems'; 'The Eighth Duke of Beaufort and the Badminton Hunt,' by T. F. Dale, author of 'The Belyoir Hunt,' illustrated; 'Men and Women of the French Renaissance,' by Edith Sichel, illustrated; 'Amateur Fish Culture,' by Charles Walker, author of 'Shooting on a Small Income'; 'The White Cottage,' by Zack; 'Ensign Knightley,' and other stories, by A. E. W. Mason; 'Another Woman's Territory,' by 'Alien,' author of 'A Daughter of the King,' 'The Untold Half,' &c., &c.; 'Marr'd in Making,' by Baroness Von Hutten; 'Retaliation,' by Herbert Flowerdew.

* *

The Life of Mrs. Lynn Linton, which Mr. G. S. Layard has written, and which Messrs. Methuen are publishing, has been undertaken at the request of Mrs. Lynn Linton's family. It tells the whole story of her personal life, of her literary career, and of the friendships which she formed with men and women so illustrious as Charles Dickens, W. Savage Landor, and George Eliot. A large number of her characteristic letters are also given.

* *

Eden Phillpotts's new Devonshire story, 'The Good Red Earth,' will be published on Monday next, May 6, in Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series.

* *

'Arrows of the Almighty,' by Owen Johnson, a novel about to be published by the Macmillan Co., includes in the story three generations, but the central part of it deals with an unfamiliar aspect of the American Civil War.

* *

'The Journal of Home Arts and Crafts, Old Furniture, Silver, China, Practical Furnishing, Decoration, Poker Work, Carving, Embroidery, and all Amateur Work.'

The above has been added as a sub-title to the House, as the editor finds so many inquirers seem ignorant of the scope of the magazine as appealing to the amateur worker at home. The magazine is published monthly by H. Virtue & Co., Ltd. An amusing and novel method of provincial art criticism is given in Gossip, on page 106.

An edition of the 'Meno' of Plato, by Mr. Seymer Thompson, Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, has been added to Macmillan's 'Classical' series.

Continuing the issue of their 'Temple Molière,' Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will publish in a few days Molière's comedy, 'Les Précieuses Ridicules.' Professor Frederic Spencer is editing the series, and supplies Explanatory Preface, Glossary, and Notes to this volume. The Map of Loveland referred to in the play is reproduced in photogravure as frontispiece.

The Art Journal for May contains illustrated articles on 'The Glasgow International Exhibition, 1901,' by Mr. Alexander M'Gibbon; 'Turner's First Patron,' by Mrs. Clara E. Cooke; 'The Art of Mr. Ernest Normand,' by Mr. Frank Rinder; 'Modern Stencilling,' by Mr. Lewis F. Day; 'The Frieze and its Origin,' by Mr. Herbert A. Bone; and 'Mr. Rudolf Kann's Collection of Pictures in Paris,' by Herr Max Friedlander of the Berlin Gallery. The frontispiece is an etching by Hugo Struck, after the painting by Claus Meyer.

Another old landmark in the neighbourhood of Paternoster Row has just disappeared. John Snow's old book shop in Ivy Lane, long known to Congregational visitors to London, passed last year into the hands of Mr. H. R. Allenson, one of the youngest of the City booksellers. The quaint old front, with its fifteen panes of glass and door solid enough for a castle, has given place to an up-to-date double-fronted plate-glass window. In the May Meetings of the first John Snow's time there was always a joint of roast beef at the command of visitors. At that time (nearly sixty years ago) the means of getting a meal were more limited than in these days of the 'alphabet' houses. A delectable feast for the mind is all that is spread to-day.

Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. are publishing a sixpenny edition of 'Dracula,' by Bram Stoker.

Mr. Joseph Jastrow (Professor of Psychology in the University of Wisconsin) has written a review of modern belief in the occult, under the title of 'Fact and Fable in Psychology.' The volume, which will be published by Messrs. Macmillan, begins by summarising the leading forms which that belief takes to-day—such as Theosophy, Spiritualism, and Christian Science. It shows the light which Psychology throws first on the power of deceiving others, then on the power of self-deception, illustrating both by experiences of juggling related to mediumistic displays.

Messrs. Methuen have issued in the Rochester Dickens a new edition of 'The Old Curiosity Shop' and 'Master Humphrey's Clock,' with an introduction by Mr. George Gissing, notes by Mr. F. G. Kitton, and topographical illustrations by Mr. G. W. Brimelow.

The 'Temple Classics' edition of 'Adam Bede' is to be published by Messrs. Dent in about a fortnight. As is usual with the books in this series, its inclusion will ensure good printing, dainty binding, and careful editing. The issue will be seen through the press by Miss Annie Matheson, and its two volumes will have for their frontispieces photogravures of the original of Adam Bede (George Eliot's father) and his house at Tewkesbury.

The associations suggested by the name of Mr. Oliver Madox Hueffer had perhaps some influence on the welcome accorded to the 'little miracle plays' ('Love's Disguises') which he issued last autumn, and will be revived by a collection of short stories, entitled 'In Arcady and Out,' which Mr. Brimley Johnson will publish for him on Monday next, with a frontispiece by Mr. James Guthrie.

Mr. Johnson will have ready for the same date a volume of parodies which Mr. Arthur Rickett, author of 'Lost Chords: Some Emotions without Morals,' has revised and reprinted from Punch, the Westminster Gazette, and other sources. The famous 'Love Letters' have been once more recast for this occasion.

Mr. Macqueen has acquired the English rights of, and is publishing next week, a novel entitled 'The Devil's Plough,' by Anna Farquhar, an American writer. This book, which deals with the attractive period of French history concerning the Regency of Anne of Austria, is already having a great success in America.

Mr. Grant Richards will publish George Egerton's new work, 'Rosa Amorosa: the Love Letters of a Woman,' on May 7.

The Autobiography of the Rev. Alexander J. Harrison, M.A., Incumbent of St. Thomas the Martyr, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, is about to be published by Messrs. Cassell & Company under the title of 'An Eventful Life: Adventures, Incidents, Inferences.' The book will be found to contain the varied record of a fighter, optimist, sceptic, preacher, priest, and missionary.

Mr. H. W. Household, assistant master at Clifton College, has written a little treatise on the elementary principles of English grammar which Canon Glazebrook in a preface describes as 'extremely simple and light, without being childish.' Any child who has mastered what it contains will be materially assisted towards the learning of Latin or any other language. The book is published by Messrs. Macmillan.

Lady Acland has completed another long novel which will be published this season by Mr. John Macqueen. The scene of the story is laid in Malta, and many references are made to the new century. Lady Acland will be remembered as the author of two other novels which dealt a good deal with politics. Her new novel, however, is not exactly a political one; it would more accurately be described as the story of an international episode.

Mr. Elliot Stock announces for immediate publication 'A New Translation of Isaiah,' with explanatory notes and a history of the life of Isaiah, by Rev. E. Flecher. The same firm will also issue shortly 'Responsiveness and Communion with the Blest,' by Rev. Vincent J. Leatherdale, and 'By the Power of the Spirit of God: a Plea for Spiritual Religion,' by a Yorkshire Priest.

To meet the convenience of its American publishers, Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co., the new book by Maeterlinck, 'The Life of the Bee,' will be published by Mr. George Allen on May 8, instead of on May 3 as previously announced; and, by arrangement with Mr. Grant Richards, the drama by this author: 'Aglavaine and Selysette,' previously published by him, has been transferred to, and will in future be published by, George Allen.

Messrs. Scott, Greenwood & Co. have made arrangements for the issue of a series of 'Handy Guides to the Choice of Books,' on a plan not hitherto attempted on a large scale. The best books of every age and every literature in the English language will be shown in such a way as to aid Public Library Committees, Booksellers, Private Collectors, and the General Reader, in the selection of the greatest works of literature, whether imaginative, scientific, historical, or technical. The first section, dealing with Prose Fiction, will be issued in the course of this year.

We learn that Mr. Stanley Paul, of Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., publishers, Paternoster Row, is sailing on Saturday next from Liverpool to the United States in the interests of his firm. Mr. Paul is very well known in London; and his friends on this side, who appreciate his courtesy and business tact, hope that his mission may be successful.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish 'The Lighter Side of Cricket,' by Captain Philip Trevor, a well-known writer on sporting subjects. This book deals with its subject, as its title implies, in no severe and technical spirit, and contains chapters on cricketing in the army, country house cricket, village cricket, cricket for women, and cricket as a profession.

* *

Miss Mary and Miss Jane Findlater, authors respectively of 'A Narrow Way' and 'The Green Graves of Balgowrie,' are making an interesting experiment in a book which Messrs. Methuen have just published. This book, entitled 'Tales that are Told,' is written in collaboration by the two sisters.

* *

Mr. Charles Richardson, the author of 'The English Turf,' recently published by Messrs. Methuen, has been fortunate enough to secure a reader in the person of His Majesty the King, who has commanded Sir Dighton Probyn to convey to Mr. Richardson his thanks for the book.

* *

The publication of Mr. Percy Fitzgerald's new book, 'Fifty Years of Catholic Life and Progress under the rule of Cardinal Wiseman, Cardinal Newman, Cardinal Manning, and Cardinal Vaughan,' by Mr. Fisher Unwin, is all the more timely owing to the attention which is being directed to the new Catholic Cathedral at Westminster. The book brings home to one the remarkable growth of the Roman Church in England.

'How to Make and How to Mend' is the title of a most useful, suggestive, and fully illustrated little book, a new edition of which has recently been published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. It tells one how to blast boulders as well as bind books, how to make a log roller and blow eggs. On page 140 is a description of what is called the 'Turtle Knot,' for fastening eyed fishing hooks to gut; probably the Turtle Knot is meant, but we should be sorry for the salmon angler who made it as shown in the lower of the two illustrations. For boys of an ingenious turn of mind this little book will be a delight. Here is a description of how to marble book-edges:

'Dissolve 4ozs. of gum arabic in 2 quarts of water, mix colours with water, sprinkle them finely on the surface of the gum water, and curl and draw them into streaks with a stick. Hold the leaves of the book close together, and dip the edge only lightly on the surface of the liquid.'

'The Further Memoirs of Marie Bashkirtseff, together with a Correspondence between Marie Bashkirtseff and Guy de Maupassant,' is the title of a book which Mr. Grant Richards will publish at once. The volume contains illustrations.

* *

'Copyright Laws and Treaties of All Countries,' a new and materially enlarged edition (subscription price 8s., after publication 10s.) of the German 'Verbatim Edition,' revised by the Secretary of the International Bureau for Intellectual Property, Professor Ernst Röthlisberger, will shortly be issued by the publishing firm of G. Hedeler, Leipzig.

Messrs. Sands & Co. announce for early publication two works on the recent Ashanti Campaigns, viz.: 'Hints on Bush Fighting,' by Lieutenant-Colonel A. F. Montanaro, R.A., the author of which took a prominent part in the recent Ashanti Campaign, and particularly the punitive operations that followed the Relief of Kumasi, and the work deals fully with the methods of warfare rendered necessary by the peculiar topographical and climatic conditions of West Africa; and 'The Ashanti Campaign of 1900,' by Captain C. H. Armitage, D.S.O., and Lieutenant-Colonel A. F. Montanaro, R.A.

* *

M. Armand Colin, of Paris, sends us an interesting and timely little work, 'Le Fer, la Houille et la Métallurgie à la fin du XIX^e Siècle,' by M. Georges Villain. In this work the author goes very carefully into the question of the present production and working of metals in France, and shows the difficulties and disadvantages these industries labour under in France, Germany, and Belgium in consequence of the scarcity of coal. M. Villain appears to be well up in the subject both as regards Europe and America, and his work will certainly be of value and interest in this country, especially as the proposed tax on coal exported from this country will have a great effect on Continental industries.

* *

Some selections from the works of Jacob Behmen, the Teutonic philosopher, will be published shortly by Messrs. Methuen under the title of 'The Supersensual Life,' edited with a preface by Mr. Bernard Holland.

* *

The second (April) number of La Revue de Paris, which Mr. Fisher Unwin has just published, contains many interesting articles. M. Billot contributes a second article on 'The Triple Alliance'; Charles Diehl discourses on 'Dead Towns of the East'; André Le Breton writes on the beginnings of the popular novel; Gabriel Seaille tells of Alfred Agache, 'Le Peintre du Destin'; and there is also a paper from the pen of Gaston de Ségur, entitled 'Au Pays des Maoris—En Piroque.' M. Paul Adam's serial, 'L'Enfant d'Austerlitz,' commences in this number.

* *

Mr. Macqueen has just ready two new novels, one by Mr. Alfred Barrett (son of Mr. Wilson Barrett), entitled 'The Golden Lotus,' and 'In the City,' by Mr. Alfred Hurry.

* *

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish 'Derwent's Horse,' a story by Mr. Victor Rousseau, who, before he was a member of a troop of Irregular Horse, occupied an important position on a South African journal.

* *

'England's Phantom Army, the Unrealities, Delusions, and Imperfections of the Brodrick scheme,' by 'A Patriotic Soldier,' is the title of a brochure which Messrs. Sands & Co. announce for immediate publication. It is said the author is in a position to write with authority on the subject.

* *

'A Garden Diary,' by the Hon. Emily Lawless, will be published by Messrs. Methuen in a few days. It is the Diary of a year, September 1899–September 1900, and is chiefly devoted to gardening matters, especially to landscape gardening and the Natural History that belongs to gardens.

* *

A copy of the 'Life of General Wauchope' has been sent by the author for His Majesty's acceptance, and Sir Arthur Bigge, writing from Buckingham Palace to acknowledge receipt, says that he is commanded by the King to thank Mr. Baird for the volume and for his letter.

* *

'Slang and its Analogies,' by John S. Farmer and W. E. Henley. Mr. Farmer, writing from 1 New Road, Oxford, asks us to inform the trade that information concerning this work, its present condition and prospects of completion, can be obtained from him at the above address.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOKS.

Viewed from a sentimental standpoint, it comes upon us as a kind of shock to learn that these universally popular handbooks should no longer be associated with the house whose name they will doubtless continue to bear. Originated, written, and edited by the late John Murray at a period far beyond the memory of most of us, they have flourished during the whole of the Victorian Era. Mr. Murray, in a circular just issued, gives excellent reasons why, in the general expansion of his business, particularly in the larger development of his Colonial trade, he has found it desirable to transfer these important works to Mr. Edward Stanford, to whose business they are peculiarly suitable, and where they will doubtless be conducted with the admirable efficiency which has always been their leading characteristic.

INCREASED USE OF ALUMINIUM.

Nikola Tesla, in an article in the Century, says: 'There can be no doubt that, at a time not very distant, iron, in many of its now uncontested domains, will have to pass the sceptre to another; the coming age will be the age of aluminium. The absolutely unavoidable consequence of the advance of the aluminium industry will be the annihilation of the copper industry. They cannot exist and prosper together, and the latter is doomed beyond any hope of recovery. Even now it is cheaper to convey an electric current through aluminium wires than through copper wires; aluminium castings cost less, and in many domestic and other uses copper has no chance of successfully competing.'

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 8.—JAMES LACKINGTON.

(Concluded.)

When he was first initiated into the various manœuvres practised by booksellers he found it customary among them, when any books had not gone off so rapidly as expected, to put what remained of such articles into private sales where only booksellers were admitted, and of these only such as were invited by having a catalogue sent them. At one of these sales he had frequently seen seventy or eighty thousand books sold after dinner.

He was very much surprised to learn on his first attending these sales that it was common for such as purchased remainders to destroy half or three-fourths, and to charge the full publication price, or nearly that, for such as they kept on hand; and 'there was a kind of standing order amongst the trade, that in case any one was known to sell articles under the publication price, such a person was to be excluded from trade sales; so blind were copyright holders to their own interest.'

He adhered to this rule for a time, but he soon discovered that books that would not sell for six shillings may still be sold for three or two shillings, and so in proportion. He adopted this plan instead of destroying stock, and so disposed of many hundreds of thousands of books. 'This part of my conduct,' he says, 'though evidently highly beneficial to the community, and even to booksellers, created me many enemies among the trade, some of whom . . . by a variety of pitiful insinuations and dark innuendos strained every nerve to injure the reputation I had already acquired with the public, determined to effect my ruin, which indeed they daily prognosticated, with a demon-like spirit, must inevitably very speedily follow.'

In Letter XXXVI. Lackington furnishes some curious information about the relations of authors and publishers. 'Nothing is more common,' he says, 'than to hear authors complaining against publishers for want of liberality in purchasing their manuscripts.' He seldom purchased manuscripts or published new books himself. He felt himself on that account quite impartial in expressing the opinion that publishers possessed more liberality than any other set of tradesmen as relates to purchasing manuscripts and copyrights, in confirmation of which he quotes Dr. Johnson: 'Sir, I always said the booksellers were a generous set of men.'

We are in the habit of boasting in our own days of the very large sums paid by publishers to authors, but it may surprise some of our friends to learn that the same spirit of large liberality was not wanting more than a hundred years ago. Lackington quotes a few of the authors of those days who were not badly paid, by their publishers. 'Mr. Elliot, bookseller, Edinburgh' (presumably a forbear of the present respected Andrew), 'gave Mr. Smellie a thousand pounds for his "Philosophy of Natural History" when only the heads of the chapters were written. Dr. Robertson received £600 for his "History of Scotland," but for his "Charles V." he received £4,500. Hume received £5,200 for his "History of Britain." Dr. Hawksorth received £6,000 for his "Compilation of Voyages," and I leave it to any considerate person to judge whether in paying so enormous a price the publisher did not run a great risk when it is considered how great the expenses of bringing forward such a work must have been.' He quotes an instance, not by any means without parallel in our own days, of a Mr. R. who was paid £1,600 to do work which he died without performing, having spent the money which was not recoverable.

Here is an astounding fact! 'Many novels have been offered to booksellers; indeed, many have been actually published that were not worth the expense of paper and printing; so that the copyright was dear at any price.'

Ah! prophetic Lackington, you must have been thinking of the Twentieth not the Eighteenth century!

Lackington was now in the full swim of his prosperity, he bought books by the thousand and even tens of thousands—and, reflecting thereon, he says that he often looked back with astonishment at his own courage in purchasing, and his wonderful success in taking money enough to pay the extensive demands made upon him. 'There is not,' says he, 'another instance of success so rapid and constant under such circumstances.'

As was customary in the eighteenth century, Lackington issued immense quantities of Halfpenny Tokens. The following is a description of one of them:—

Obv. Bust to left, Lackington, 1795.

Edge. Payable at the Temple of the Muses.

'Among all the schools where the knowledge of mankind is to be acquired I know of none equal to that of a bookseller's shop,' says Lackington. 'A bookseller who has any taste in literature may, in some measure, be said to feed his mind as cooks and butchers' wives get fat by the smell of meat.' And thus it was that he himself 'grew fat and kicked' like Jeshurun. He kicked against the pricks of his early training in Methodism, and held himself to be free of all narrow creeds and dogmas. 'Mr. Wesley,' he says, 'told his society in Broadmead, Bristol, in my hearing, that he could never keep a bookseller six months in his flock.'

Now that we have landed him on the full stage of prosperity, we can but briefly trace the remainder of his course. I will quote here one or two of his maxims. 'I was obliged to be pretty well informed of the state of politics in Europe, as I have always found book-selling is much affected by the political state of affairs . . . if there is anything in the newspapers of consequence, that draws many to the coffee-house where they chat away the evenings instead of visiting the shops of booksellers (as they ought to do, no doubt) or reading at home. The best time for book-selling is when there is no kind of news stirring.' 'As I never had any part of the miser in my composition, I always proportioned my expenses according to my profits; that is, I have for many years expended two-thirds of the profits of my trade, which proportion of expenditure I never exceeded.'

His progressive steps from poverty to prosperity he thus describes: *'In the beginning I opened and shut my own shop, a year after 'I beckoned across the way for a pot of good porter,' a few years later 'I sometimes invited my friends to dinner off roast veal,' next in due progress 'ham was introduced, and a pudding was the next addition,' then for some time 'a glass of brandy and water was a luxury,' succeeded by a glass of Mr. Beaufoy's raisin wine; as soon as his two-third profits enabled him, 'good red port immediately appeared.' Lodging in the country in due time gave place* to a country house, in another year the inconveniences of a stage coach were remedied by a chariot.

'My precious rib has ventured to declare

'Tis vulgar on one's legs to take the air.'

'For four years Upper Holloway was to me an elysium, then Surry appeared unquestionably the most beautiful county in England, and Upper Merton the most rural village in Surry. So now Merton is selected as the seat of occasional philosophical retirement.'

By his doctor's advice he bought a horse and saved his life by the exercise it afforded him. 'The old adage,' he says, '"Set a beggar on horseback and he'll ride to the devil," was deemed to be fully verified, but when Mrs. Lackington mounted another horse people were very sorry to see people so young in business run on at so great a rate.'

'It seems that at last people have discovered the secret springs from whence I drew my wealth—some can tell you the very number of my fortunate lottery ticket, others are as positive that I found bank-notes in an old book to the value of many thousand pounds. . . . But I assure you upon my honour that I found the whole of what I am possessed of in small profits, bound by Industry and clasped by Economy.'

For some years he had contemplated going out of business on account of his and Mrs. Lackington's bad state of health, but although he had no family of his own, 'his friends reminded him that he had about fifty poor relations, some old and helpless and many who had justly formed some expectations from him, so he regarded the giving up of such a trade as he was in possession of before he was absolutely obliged was a kind of injustice to those whose ties of blood he felt bound to relieve and protect.' These sentiments are very creditable to him, and he seems to have carried them out.

For the next few years he spent much of his time in travelling about the country with Mrs. Lackington, and enjoyed life; amongst many other places visited by him was his native town of Wellington, Taunton, Bristol, &c. He amused himself in calling on some of his old masters, with whom he had twenty years before worked as a journeyman shoemaker. He addressed each with, 'Pray, sir, have you got any occasion?' the term used when seeking employment. 'Most of those honest men had quite forgot my person, as many of them had not seen me since I worked for them, so that it is not easy for you to conceive with what astonishment they gazed upon me. For you must know that I had the vanity (I call it humour) to do this in my chariot, attended by my servants; and on telling them who I was, all appeared very happy to see me.' Some of his old friends declared they had known him for fifty years (he being then forty-five). One old chap distinctly remembered seeing him many times on the top of a six-and-twenty round ladder, balanced on the chin of a merryandrew! but he says the old man was egregiously mistaken.

The second edition of 'The Life' ends with the year 1794, when he was about forty-eight years old. In 1793 he sold a fourth share of his business to Mr. Robert Allen, who had been brought up in the shop. He does not himself mention the removal of the business from Chiswell Street to Finsbury Square, which seems to have occurred about the year 1794. The shop occupied a large block at one of the corners of the square.

I learn from Mr. Davenport's 'Life of Lackington,' in a volume entitled 'Lives of Individuals' (Tegg, 1841), that Lackington 'purchased extensive premises in Moorfields at the south-west corner of Finsbury Square, and fitted them up in such a manner as was never seen before or since. The shop was so capacious that a mail-coach and four was easily driven round the counters when it was opened. From the shop to the roof, four or five stories high, ran a wide cylindrical aperture surmounted by

* Nichols, in 'The Literary Anecdotes,' gives the whole account thus: 'Johnson has dignified the Booksellers as the "Patrons of Literature." In the case of his "Lives of the Poets," which drew forth that encomium, he had bargained for 200 guineas; and the Booksellers spontaneously added a third hundred.' On this occasion the great moralist observed to the writer of this article: 'Sir, I always said the Booksellers were a generous set of men. Nor, in the present instance, have I reason to complain. The fact is, not that they have paid me too little, but that I have written too much.' The 'Lives' were soon published in a separate edition, when, for a very few corrections, the Doctor was presented with another hundred guineas.'

a glazed dome and flagstaff. Every corner of the vast edifice was crowded with books. Its owner proudly called it "The Temple of the Muses." It has recently been destroyed by fire.

Charles Knight, who visited the Temple of the Muses in 1801, when he was ten years old, gives an interesting description of the building—the broad staircases, the 'lounging rooms,' and the circular galleries, &c.

I find the following in a footnote in Nichols's 'Literary Anecdotes,' vol. iii. (1812):—

The Bibliomaniacs (if any such survive) who recollect the contents of Mr. Lackington's first catalogue in Chiswell Street, and the dimensions of his shop, would be astonished when they first visited the Temple of the Muses in Finsbury Square; but, as Mr. Lackington observed in the motto on his first carriage: 'Small gains do great things,' and in him was exemplified the quotation very aptly selected for him in more than one of his catalogues: 'Sutor ultra crepidam felicitur ausus.' As he is still living, and has favoured the world with his own memoirs, I shall only say that he is particularly fortunate in having for his successor in business a well-educated, gentlemanly nephew* and partner of considerable talent and equal industry.

In 1798 he gave up his interest in the business to his cousin* George Lackington (referred to in the above quotation).

In 1804 he published a volume called 'Confessions.' This work I have not seen, but I believe that he expresses great regret at having in his 'Life' cast so much ridicule upon the Wesleyans.

In his 'Confessions' he mentions Dorcas slightly as having misled him into reading 'gay, trashy narratives.'

He retired first to Thornbury and next to Alvestone, in Gloucestershire, where he erected a small chapel. He soon became a preacher himself in the neighbouring villages, and spent his time chiefly in visiting the sick, relieving the poor, distributing tracts, and expounding the Scriptures. In 1806 he removed to Taunton and built another chapel at a cost of £3,000, and endowed it with £150 a year for the minister. This involved him in a dispute with the Conference, and he sold the chapel to them for £1,000. He removed to Budleigh Salterton, where he built another chapel at a cost of £2,000, and allowed £150 a year to the minister. He died from apoplexy, in the odour of sanctity, November 22, 1815, aged seventy. His remains rest in Budleigh churchyard.

At the date of Lackington's death in 1815 my late partner, Sampson Low, was a youth of twenty, in the house of Messrs. Longman. I have often heard him speak of the Temple of the Muses, and he had seen Lackington himself. He seemed to have shared a pretty common opinion among the members of the regular trade that Lackington was looked upon as somewhat of a black sheep.

* Davenport says 'he made over the whole of his business to George, one of his cousins by the father's side to Mr. Allen, and other parties.'

I find that this death of a man known to my late partner, and who died within a few years of my own birth, brings the story of 'Booksellers of Other Days' too nearly down to the present day. If I am to continue these 'sketches' I must hark back for a century or two.

TENNYSON'S BIRTHPLACE.

We have to thank Mr. I. W. Ruddock, bookseller, High Street, Lincoln, for the loan of his interesting illustration of the house at Somersby where Tennyson was born. It was specially done for the capital little 'Guide to Lincoln, the Cathedral and District,' which is published by Mr. Ruddock; it is well printed and well illustrated; there are two plans and over fifty pictures. To anyone in want of a suggestion as to where to spend a very interesting Saturday to Monday holiday, we say go to Lincoln and get Mr. Ruddock's guide. The town has a history of over 2,000 years, and is rich in memorials of almost every race which has possessed the country, from the aboriginal Briton to the present time.

ADVERTISEMENT CANVASSERS AND AGENTS' COMMISSION.

The claims of advertisement canvassers and agents attached to the staffs of newspapers to the continued payment, after they ceased to be so employed, of commission upon advertisements obtained by them has been tested in the High Court in the case of 'Bettany v. The Eastern Morning News.' Mr. Justice Mathew, in giving judgment, said he was forced to the conclusion that there was no such custom as the plaintiff had attempted to set up.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. Adam and Charles Black.—'The Story of the Talisman,' and 'The Story of Quentin Durward,' both volumes by Harriet Gassiot (Mrs. A. Barton), edited, with introduction and notes, by W. M. Mackenzie, M.A., of the Glasgow Academy, have now been added to the 'Sir Walter Scott' Readers for Young People. If such compilations tend to a more appreciative acquaintance with the Scottish novelist by the older generation, they will serve an exceedingly useful purpose. Certainly no stories better calculated to interest young folk could have been selected from the wide range of the Waverley novels, but, like most lovers of Scott, we look with some degree of diffidence on this interference with our cherished idol.

From the same.—'Contes et Mélanges,' par Voltaire. A considerable diversity of opinion will no doubt exist as to the suitability of Voltaire's writings for school purposes, but certainly if any are to be selected the 'Contes et Mélanges' could scarcely be improved upon. It is hardly necessary to say that a certain amount of pruning was required, and this has been performed by Mr. F. B. Kirkman with excellent skill and discretion. A short life of the author is given, with a chronological table, while at the end of the book are a number of notes and some useful oral exercises. Several illustrations are also included. We notice that the old-established firm of Adam & Charles Black becomes for the nonce 'Adam et Charles Black, Editeurs,' while the town of publication is printed as 'Londres.' Certainly no loophole is afforded in this volume for the reader to avoid the study of French.

From F. A. Brockhaus, Leipzig.—'Allgemeine Bibliographie,' 45ter Jahrgang 1900.' We gladly welcome the forty-fifth yearly volume of this General Bibliography, which well fulfils the promise of its title-page by giving a monthly list of all the more important new publications in the literatures of Germany and foreign countries. The countries represented are Germany, France, England, America, Italy, Spain, Scandinavia, Russia, and some others. Arranged alphabetically under authors' names the publications are classified under ten different headings, and a carefully prepared index adds greatly to the usefulness of this bibliography, which is calculated to render good service to the book-buyer as well as the bookseller, and in all respects does credit to the old and well-known firm of F. A. Brockhaus. There is also an English edition in which the original prices are given.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Limited.—'Afield and Afloat,' by Frank R. Stockton. Readers who do not welcome a new book by Mr. Stockton must indeed be ungrateful for the many 'good times' they cannot but have had while reading those quietly humorous stories he has the secret of writing. We still look back with a lively feeling of ever present enjoyment at the days when we first made acquaintance with 'Rudder Grange,' 'Rudder Grangers Abroad,' 'The Merry Chanter,' 'Squirrel Inn,' and other delightful stories so quaintly told.

'Afield and Afloat' contains eleven short stories: the first of which is 'The Buller-Poddington Compact.' Buller and Poddington are old friends, and have been associated in business since they were of age. Each has a country house—Buller's is by the sea, for he is fond of the water; Poddington's in a beautiful upland region, for he is very fond of horses and driving. Each wished the other to pay him a visit, but neither would accept his friend's invitation, because Buller disliked entrusting himself to an amateur whip and Poddington would have preferred a professional mariner to steer any craft in which he embarked. However, as their respective wives and families visit at each other's houses, their husbands' absence leads to gossip; so, at last, Buller consents to accept Poddington's invitation to pay him a visit at his country house, and goes. The morning of the day after Buller's arrival his friend invites him to take a drive. The amateur sailor 'suppresses a certain rising emotion' and goes. The drive, which is attended with even more unpleasant misadventures than those which befell the Pickwickian expedition to Dingley Dell, is excellently described by Mr. Stockton, and this opening story whets the reader's appetite for the treat in store for him from those which follow.

From the same.—'The Splendid Spur,' by 'Q,' has now been issued in a well-printed sixpenny edition, and many thousand lovers of adventure, who have hitherto been deterred by the price, will be enabled to read of the gallant deeds of Mr. John Marvel, 'a servant of his late Majesty King Charles I., in the years 1642-3.' The story is one of the best 'Q' has written.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Tutorial Press).—'Ovid: Metamorphoses, III., 1-130,' edited by W. P. Steen, M.A., and B. J. Hayes, M.A. The text of the 'Metamorphoses' adopted in this edition is that of Zingerle, and to this the editors have appended some exceedingly useful notes. An interesting introduction is also given, supplying details of Ovid's life and writings, with some account of the subject-matter of this special poem and the legend upon which it is founded. Nor is the character of the metre allowed to pass unnoticed. In connection with this some admirable rules for the learner's guidance in reading Latin verse are included. The little book is evidently prepared with a keen eye to examination requirements, and the student who is about to undergo this ordeal should find it of excellent service.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd. 'The Sin of Jasper Standish,' by 'Rita.' 'There was great talk in the little town of Rathfurley, when it was known that the Hermitage had been taken by an English family.' Thus Rita opens her new story, in which she shows herself at her best. We are not left to our own imaginings as to the talk, but it is given with all the shrewdness and drollery characteristic of Irish gossip. Of course the new tenants, Sir Anthony Orcheton and his beautiful daughter Lyle, are the chief subjects of discussion; but a very fertile and amusing topic is afforded by the chances of neighbours and friends finding employment with the newcomers. However, the gossip is not confined to the Hermitage. Mr. Jasper Standish, riding up the street on his beautiful Irish mare, comes in for his share, and is not too favourably criticised. At school in England Lyle Orcheton had made friends with Nora Callaghan, the manager of the Rathfurley Bank, and the Orchetons are staying at Mr. Callaghan's house while the Hermitage is being prepared for them. Now, Jasper Standish has made love to Nora Callaghan; but, when the wealthy Englishman arrives, Jasper, who is heavily in debt, transfers his affections to Lyle Orcheton. One day, learning that Mr. Callaghan has to receive a large sum in gold, Jasper resolves to murder the bank manager and secure the money. He succeeds in his treacherous and cruel enterprise. But a boy named Mickey Doolan, whom Jasper employs as a spy, has been bribed to watch him by an English servant of the Callaghans, Jane Grapnell, whose daughter Standish had seduced. His victim gave birth to a child, and, murdering it, died after being tried and convicted of infanticide. We must not further pursue the terrible career of Jasper Standish, but refer our readers to the enthralling pages of 'Rita,' who has seldom more brilliantly displayed her creative and descriptive powers than in this well-told romance, which is undoubtedly one of the best the present season has produced.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden.—'Official Medals and Ribbons of the British Army, 1800 to Present Day,' showing both sides of forty-eight medals. Of this collection of official medals and ribbons we need only say that it is fully up to the high level attained by Messrs. Gale & Polden in their publications, the medals being faithfully reproduced and the colours of the ribbons correctly given.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'Literary Friends and Acquaintance: a Personal Retrospect of American Authorship,' by W. D. Howells. The enthusiastic lover of books, whose reading has caused him to cherish a feeling akin to worship for their authors, will have an exceedingly pleasant time in Mr. Howells's society. He will be introduced to a vast number of American literary celebrities, ranging from Longfellow to John G. Palfrey; will learn of their inner life and social surroundings; and will be put, so to speak, on terms of congenial familiarity with them. Dean Howells himself in 1860 was just such an ardent young worshipper of men and things literary, and he advanced to a contemplation of the gifted ones with a due sensation of veneration and awe. The first author in whose intellectual sunshine he basked was Bayard Taylor, and it is recorded at the hospitable house where they met that the neophyte never addressed him a word. But no doubt he hung on every syllable that fell from the great man's mouth—which must have been embarrassing. Howells was very modest in those days. His next literary meeting of distinction was with Lowell, before whom, as he had made an unsolicited call, he sat inwardly quaking. However, the distinguished writer treated him very graciously, and a close intimacy resulted between them. It was at Lowell's house that he later met Oliver Wendell Holmes and Mr. Fields, of Ticknor & Fields, the well-known publishers. Understanding that Howells proposed to visit Concord, Lowell volunteered to give him an introduction to Hawthorne, whom Holmes likened in his personality to 'a dim room with a little taper burning on the corner of the mantel.' The author of 'The Scarlet Letter' received his visitor very kindly, though with shy reserve, which is more than Emerson (to whom he was next passed on) did; indeed, the philosopher produced anything but an agreeable impression. After his experiences of the highly-toned intellectuality of Boston, the author was inclined to feel disappointed with literary New York. Here he met Charles F. Browne ('Artemus Ward'), Walt Whitman, R. H. Stoddard, John Lothrop Motley, John J. Piatt and his wife, and many others. Of all these he furnishes interesting pictures. Into the further experiences of Mr. Howells we have not space to penetrate. From what we have already said the reader will be able to form a very accurate idea of the book, and we can assure him of much agreeable entertainment in its perusal. The numerous portraits and other illustrations give additional zest to the text.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Adam Bede,' by George Eliot. Popular taste at present inclines to small volumes, and no doubt Mr. Lane is acting wisely in issuing 'The New Pocket Library,' of which George Eliot's work forms the first volume. It is very neatly produced, well printed and bound, while by use of a specially thin and opaque paper the bulk is reduced to a minimum. We anticipate a great success for the 'New Pocket Library.'

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'Letters of Edward Bickersteth, Bishop of South Tokyo,' by Samuel Bickersteth, M.A. We are glad to see that the demand for this volume has necessitated a second edition, for surely no book could be more productive of good in its influence than this record of a life so freely devoted to the furtherance of God's kingdom on earth. Treating to so large an extent of affairs in the Far East, the work possesses a value now-a-days, to those who can read between the lines, exceeding that of many books more closely directed to the discussion of political events, and in the trend of religious questions the acute observer will see the elucidation of other important matters. We would heartily recommend all thoughtful readers to study this volume and we are sure they will derive much benefit from its perusal.

From the same.—'White Wings,' 'The New Prince Fortunatus,' 'Lady Silverdale's Sweetheart,' and 'Wolfenberg' have been added to the new edition of William Black's novels, in its pretty terra cotta binding, which the firm in Fetter Lane are now publishing. At this date it is hardly necessary to make any comments on the extreme interest attaching to these works, but we may at least call attention to the readily accessible form in which they are issued. The large clear type is an inestimable advantage in these days when the eyesight is tried so much, and in other respects the edition is worthy of the highest praise. It should place healthy breezy novels within reach of thousands who have not hitherto been rich enough to obtain them.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'The Teacher's Manual of Object Lessons for Rural Schools,' by Vincent T. Murché, F.R.G.S. Books I. and II. Perfect simplicity, so valuable in the instruction of young scholars, characterises the method of these volumes. Their great aim, to quote the words of the preface, has been to awaken in the children the spirit and habit of observation and inquiry, and thus to foster in them the love of country life. Rural schools have a great advantage over the town institutions in being surrounded by a wealth of natural objects for illustration, and instruction and practical observation can thus proceed hand in hand. In Book I. of Mr. Murché's course the lessons are taken from simple natural phenomena, such as the air, sky, sun, clouds, rain, wind, and so forth; the objects that one would meet with in a ramble about a farm—the implements of labour, horses, carts, cows, pigs, fowls, &c.; the seasons—spring, summer, autumn, and winter; and the more common minerals—coal, chalk, clay, and the like; while Book II. treats of domestic and wild animals, birds, and plants. Both volumes are well illustrated.

From the same.—'The Parts of Speech and their Uses: an Easy Method of English Analysis,' by H. W. Household, M.A., with a Preface by the Rev. Canon Glazebrook, M.A. This we may at once say is a capital little manual, simple, practical, and admirably clear—just the basis upon which to build up the education of young people in English grammar. Of course very much depends upon the efficiency of the teacher, but with such a guide as this to his hands, even the least naturally-gifted master should have no difficulty in conveying a thorough knowledge of the rudiments of English composition. The author confines himself strictly to the object of his book, and never encroaches beyond its outlines—a matter of no slight importance, seeing that he must naturally know so very much more than the children for whom he writes are capable of understanding.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—‘A Narrow Way,’ by Mary Findlater. ‘Miss Harriet Cameron had resided for thirty years all alone by herself at No. 17 Morningsfield Terrace, Edinburgh, when her young niece, Catherine Cameron, came to stay with her—an event which she called ‘a great change.’ ‘But it was not; nothing, it seemed, till Death himself came in, could ever change anything in Miss Cameron’s home; so Kitty had to live an utterly unvarying life.’ Four years had passed since a male visitor had entered the house in the shape of a missionary who came to dinner, when Miss Cameron receives a letter from Dr. Marks, who had married a cousin of Kitty’s and taken her out to India, where he practised as a physician, and where she died five years before the opening of the story, leaving five young children. The doctor has returned to England with his family, and, having business to transact in Edinburgh, begs Miss Cameron’s hospitality for a week, meanwhile leaving his little ones in England. Although not very desirous of having a man in the house, Miss Cameron invites the doctor, and he arrives in due course. At first the excessively still life at Morningsfield Terrace, where the supply of literature is limited to a few religious books and reports of missionary societies, offers so little attraction that the visitor thinks of curtailing his stay. However, Kitty so favourably impresses the doctor that he makes up his mind to remain. Under his tutelage Kitty gradually departs from the narrow way her aunt would have had her follow—with what result must be sought in the pages of this brightly written story, in which there seems to us only one defect. This is an almost total absence of Scottish dialect or local colour, which, when not overdone, add charm to a story. Where it not for the names of persons and places one could scarcely guess that the actors in this drama were Scotch and the scene Scotland.

From Messrs. W. P. Nimmo, Hay & Mitchell, Edinburgh.—‘Victoria: Queen and Empress,’ by David Campbell, with numerous illustrations. Yet another addition to the already numerous biographies of her late Majesty. In his preface the author says his aim ‘has been to endeavour, from a variety of points of view, to present a popularly interesting life. . . . The great historical events have been only touched upon when they affected the Queen herself or as she was directly or personally interested in them.’ He has certainly succeeded in writing a very pleasant biography, which the publishers have produced in a handsomely got-up and well-illustrated volume. The embellishments include an excellent photograph of Queen Victoria taken during her last visit to Dublin. We note one or two typographical errors. It is stated at p. 15 that the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Kent was solemnised on May 29, 1818, according to the Lutheran rites at Coburg. ‘In July of the same year they went through the ceremony of marriage prescribed by the Anglican Church at Kent.’ For ‘Kent’ read ‘Kew.’ At p. 43 we read that ‘Sir Walter [Scott] has left in his diary a brief record of an interview with the Princess whom he did not live to hail as Queen. Under date 19th May, 1828, when the Princess was completing her nineteenth year,’ &c., &c. This, of course, should read ‘ninth’ year. But these are venial errors in a really attractive book.

From the Office, 5 Henrietta Street, W.C.—The Studio, Part 97 (April 15, 1901). The successive issues of this magazine are now so uniformly excellent that it is difficult to find fresh words of praise for the mid-monthly number just to hand. Perhaps the most interesting article is that on ‘The Work of J. M. Swan, A.R.A.’ from the pen of Mr. A. L. Baldry. This is illustrated with several specimens of the artist’s skill, including a reproduction in colours of a drawing in pastel entitled ‘A Jaguar,’ and a tinted reproduction of a drawing of a puma. The other contents of the number include an illustrated paper on ‘Some Modern Italian Artists,’ by Dr. Romualdo Pantini, and practical directions ‘How to Use a Lead Pencil,’ written and illustrated by Mr. E. Borough Johnson. ‘The Lay Figure’ continues to give off pithy and amusing criticisms on features of the time. This month the subject is ‘The Newspaper Press.’ Mr. Charles Holme, the editor, is to be heartily complimented on the general excellence of his magazine.

From the Office, Temple House, Temple Avenue.—This month’s number of Munsey’s Magazine is particularly good, and its contents are not only interesting in themselves, but brightly varied. Among the more noticeable we may mention ‘Royal Marriages that Failed,’ by Stewart C. Grant; ‘Where the Tobacco Grows,’ by George B. Waldron; ‘The Making of a Perfect Man,’ by William G. Anderson, M.D.; and ‘Whom the Stage Demoralises,’ by Hartley Davis. There is also an ample supply of short fiction. The numerous illustrations form a highly attractive feature of this magazine.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—‘Joseph Chamberlain: a Romance of Modern Politics,’ by Arthur Mee. Probably there is no public man at the present day about whom a greater diversity of opinion exists than the subject of this volume. Mr. Mee, however, presents us with a portrait from the national rather than the party point of view, and in his description of Mr. Chamberlain’s career he is especially wary of the more dangerous portions. His estimate on the whole may be pronounced impartial, and in regard to certain debateable points of issue, such as Mr. Chamberlain’s complicity in the Jameson raid, he is wisely content to state the arguments on both sides, leaving his readers to form their own conclusions. The character of the Colonial Secretary, self-reliant, enterprising, and smart, if at times wanting in dignity, admirably stands out in these pages, and no one can deny his possession of a strongly marked individuality. By sheer determination and unconquerable push he has worked himself up to his present position, and Mr. Mee’s work shows us very pleasantly how it has been done.

From the same.—‘General Booth, the Man and his Work,’ by Jesse Page. Mr. Page has scored a success in what he truly says is a task of some difficulty—that of writing the life of a living man. When it is added that the biography is that of a man so much alive as General Booth, and that his life involves the history and evolution of the Salvation Army, we have said enough to assure readers that this volume of the ‘New Century Leaders’ series is not a whit behind its fellows in interest and instruction.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—‘Under the Redwoods,’ by Bret Harte. A collection of short stories in the best manner of the American novelist, picturesque, vigorous, and full of warm colouring. The broad humanity of the writer is distinguishable in almost every line, and he has lost none of his power to stir the more generous impulses of his readers. In the first of the stories, ‘Jimmy’s Big Brother from California,’ he tells of the death of a miner, dearly loved by a little brother and sister at home, and how a total stranger, powerful in frame and large of heart, was led to impersonate the deceased man. There are many pathetic little touches in the tale, which are heightened by contrast with the rough character of the surroundings; and what we say about this will apply with equal force to the majority of the other stories in the volume. Like all Bret Harte’s works, it is honest and genuine; there is no straining after false effect, the interest proceeds from the writer’s natural power of telling a story of uncultivated outdoor life with simple directness and absorbing realism.

From the same.—‘Fruitful or Fruitless: a Book of Quiet Meditations,’ by the late Rev. Edward Hoare, M.A. This little book is composed of extracts from some of the sermons preached by the author in the course of his parochial ministry at Tunbridge Wells. The work of selection has evidently been performed by a sympathetic and capable hand, care being taken to choose only such portions as are complete in themselves, and that are likely to be of practical help to the reader. The tired and world-weary will find much spiritual comfort in these thoughtful expositions of Scripture, and the kindly disposition of the author seems to be reflected in every line.

From Messrs. Puttkammer & Mühlbrecht, Berlin.—‘Uebersicht der gesamten staats- und rechtswissenschaftlichen Litteratur des Jahres 1900,’ zusammengestellt von Otto Mühlbrecht, XXXIII. Jahrgang. We congratulate Herr Mühlbrecht on the appearance of the thirty-third yearly issue of this useful survey of political and legal literature of the year 1900. The languages represented are the English, French, German, Italian, Netherlandish, Scandinavian, and Spanish. The total number of publications in politics and jurisprudence which appeared during last year was 4,340, being the largest output of any year since the first appearance of Herr Mühlbrecht’s ‘Uebersicht’ in 1868, with the sole exception of the year 1884, when the total was 4,394, or an excess of 54 over last year. The totals of the various literatures were: English, 585; French, 551; German, 2,598; Italian, 285; Netherlandish, 122; Scandinavian, 117; Spanish, 82. Last year’s output was 48 in excess of the previous year 1899, when the total was 4,292, thus divided: English, 587; French, 785; German, 2,338; Italian, 251; Netherlandish, 156; Scandinavian, 107; and Spanish, 68. The success which has attended Herr Mühlbrecht’s labours is manifest from the fact that the first three years’ issue of the ‘Uebersicht’ are almost out of print, and now only obtainable by purchasers of complete sets.

From Mr. Walter Scott.—‘The Mediterranean Race: a Study of the Origin of European Peoples,’ by G. Sergi. Advantage has been taken of the publication in this country of Professor Sergi’s treatise to make it more complete, ‘richer in anthropological and ethnological documents,' and in other ways to improve it. This English edition, therefore, as the author points out, is not so much a translation of a work already published as a new book; both in form and arrangement. Even without these amendments it would, however, be a worthy volume to add to Mr. Havelock Ellis's 'Contemporary Science' series, and in its revised form it is of course still more acceptable. Professor Sergi has long been known as an authority on questions connected with anthropology, and his researches in this science have earned for him the deepest respect. His present work is an argument in favour of certain definite conclusions, of which probably the most important is the overthrow of the ancient conception of an Aryan civilisation. The two classic civilisations, Greek and Latin, were, according to his theory, not Aryan but Mediterranean. 'The Aryans were savages when they invaded Europe; they destroyed in part the superior civilisation of the Neolithic populations, and could not have created the Greco-Latin civilisation.' The book is illustrated with numerous skulls and faces which are necessary to the course of the Professor's reasoning.

From the Sign of the Unicorn.—'Vigil and Vision: a Book of Sonnets,' by W. H. Phelps. This is a daintily printed volume containing eighty pleasing sonnets, of which limits of space forbid any individual criticism or analysis. They form No. 6 of the series 'Unicorn Books of Verse.'

From the same.—'The Bacchante and other Poems and Songs,' by Walter Hogg. Another charming collection of poems. We would gladly linger over them awhile, but here again we have to deny ourselves the pleasure of devoting space we cannot spare to compositions entitled to claim it. This is No. 7 of the 'Unicorn Books of Verse.'

From the same.—'Rose Leaves, from Philostratus and other Poems,' by Percy Osborn. This is an admirable collection of English verse adaptations from the Greek Prose Epistles. We can here only say that Mr. Percy Osborn has made a worthy contribution to the delightful series, 'Unicorn Books of Verse,' of which this is the eighth number.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.—'The Hope of England,' by Z. Henry Lewis. The great obstacle to progress, according to the author of this work, is Unbelief, theological, social, and rational. Were it not for this the People would long ago have entered into possession of their Kingdom. The object of the book is to show 'how men would live in a State where Love is the Fundamental Principle of Conduct: what Laws would be enacted; what Punishments and Rewards would be meted out; and what pleasures would be enjoyed.' The various chapters respectively treat of such branches of the subject as the fallen girl, husbands and wives, our virgin daughters, the drinking mania, religion, war, the land, money, punishments, work, amusements, and governments.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Concerning Marriage,' by Rev. E. J. Hardy. The author of 'How to be Happy though Married' has gathered together in this volume a quantity of anecdotes and sayings about that so generally interesting subject, marriage. He has divided his subject into eight chapters or parts. Beginning with stories of the comedy and tragedy of marriage, he proceeds to tell his readers when and whom they ought to marry; gives advice as to engagements— which he thinks should be short; tells about some famous love affairs; discourses of old maids and old bachelors; and concludes with two very interesting chapters on social ambition and social sins. There is much wit and wisdom and some good stories to be found in this volume, which is very easy and instructive reading.

NEW EDITIONS.—The latest volume in Messrs. Macmillan's uniform and beautifully printed edition of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's novels is 'With the Immortals.'—Messrs. John Wright & Co., of Bristol, have sent out a seventh and revised edition of 'Our Baby: for Mothers and Nurses,' by Mrs. Langton Hower.—From Mr. Thomas Murby we have received a copy of the 97th edition, revised and enlarged, of that excellent text-book for schools and colleges, 'An Analysis of English History,' by W. C. Pearce and Dr. S. Hague, LL.B., revised by W. F. Baugust. This, by the way, is styled the 'King Edward the Seventh' edition.—'Advice to Twentieth-Century Business Juniors (and others of Both Sexes),' being 'counsels, commercial, physiological, social, and ethical for the making and renewal of manhood and womanhood,' by Phi Rho Chi, has now run into a third edition. The author, who evinces a strongly marked partiality for capital letters, has considerably enlarged the present issue, without in any way weakening the force of his teaching. The book is published by Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance.
